Canadian Contingent Landed in England On Thursday

London, Thursday, Oct. 8---(1.15 a. m.)-

The Canadian troops will be landed in England to-day and sent to an inland training camp.

WAR SUMMARY

The outstanding features of Thursday's news are the removal of Belgian Government to Ostend, the renewal of the German bombardment of Antwerp, and the simultaneous advance of German troops into West Flanders at several points to the southwest of Ghent. The meaning of these moves is plain. The Germans, who are now in effective occupation of three-quarters of Belgium, propose to destroy the little nation entirely, and take all its territory from the Ardennes to the seacoast. The portion of Belgium still under the rule of King Albert includes such important cities as Ghent, Bruges, Ostend and Ypres, and the Germans fear that were the Belgian army to retire from Antwerp toward the coast at Ostend, where there is a British garrison of marines, the struggle now going on would have to be continued at Ostend, where British sea power could be called into play. For that reason the German Staff is pushing the attack on West Flanders in the hope of preventing the Belgian army around Antwerp, which must number over 100,000 men, from following the Government to Ostend.

It is not unlikely that Mr. Churchill's visit to Antwerp was for consultation with the Belgian Cabinet. The removal of the seat of government from Antwerp does not necessarily involve the evacuation of the city. If the German siege guns, however, are close enough to pound the central business quarters to pieces continued resistance might be unwise. The destruction of Antwerp in the same sense in which Louvain was destroyed would be a terrible calamity, and it is not at all certain that it is warranted by the military necessities of the Allies. If the Germans are forced back to the Rhine they will not be able to hold Antwerp. If they are not forced back and remain in possession of Belgium—which, from the point of view of the Allies, is unthinkable—a beleaguered and isolated position in Antwerp could not be retained by the Belgian army. Antwerp, therefore, may go the way of Brussels. If the Germans seek to make use of the Scheldt, between Antwerp and the sea, for warlike purposes they will come into conflict at once with Holland, which insists that the river and estuary shall be treated as neutral waters. Germany has taken on enemies enough, and will be very careful not to add Dutch people to the number. So long as the war lasts, even if Germany captures Antwerp, the harbor will be useless to her for either mercantile or naval purposes.

General Joffre's announcement that the raiding German cavalry advancing upon his left wing from the Belgian border has been held in check and that to the north of Lille it has been driven back, is important. It proves that the French have not been caught napping on the Belgian frontier, and that Von Boehm's advances will find adequate forces. The Allies pushed up to block his way southward. For this new movement the German strategists have been drawing men from divers sources. Some of them are Landstrum troops from the home garrisons, and others have been carried all the way around from Metz on the Lorraine front to help at the other end of the 200-mile long battle line.

The adventure of the British submarine, E9, which torpedoed a German destroyer off the mouth of the River Ems Wednesday morning and returned safely to her base, as she did when she destroyed the German cruiser Hela off Heligoland some time ago, gives support to the belief that should the German battle fleet emerge from the snug harbor of the K. Canal it will be subjected to more resolute attack from under water. Britain has 77 submarines in commission, more than thrice as many as Germany, and her sailors are enterprising as the keenest of the Germans. The British submarine will play a great part should Germany fleet venture out into the North Sea.

THE WHIRLWIND CAMPAIGN

Napanee and parts of the County of Lennox and Addington have done splendidly in raising funds for the Patriotic Relief Fund. During the three days of canvass Napanee contributed four thousand and ninety-three dollars and of this twenty-nine hundred dollars have been paid into the bank.

Throughout the country (excluding Napanee) there has so far been subscribed the sum of fourteen hundred and sixty-six dollars, the subscriptions being as follows:

Camden Tp. Council.....	$ 400 00
Sheffield Tp. Council.....	150 00
Newburgh Village Council.....	100 00
Richmond Tp. Council.....	250 00
Bath Municipal Council.....	50 00

By subscription:—

SHEFFIELD COUNCIL.

The Council of Sheffield at a session held Monday, 5th October, granted $150.00 to the Lennox and Addington Patriotic Fund.

Arrangements were made for protesting strongly to the Railway Commission against the closing of Erinsville station by the management of the B. of Q. Ry., on 1st October.

P. F. Carscallen, Bailiff, was appointed Collector of Taxes for 1914.

STELLA.

The Amherst Island agricultural society held their annual fair on Tuesday last, and a large crowd was in attendance. A number came from Kingston, Bath, Collins Bay, Napanee and Odessa. The exhibit of horses, cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, roots, grain and ladies' work, etc., was good. Lunch was served in Victoria hall by the ladies of the Anglican church. The members of the Methodist church had also an ice cream stand on Main street. A very interesting horse race was held in the afternoon. There were four contestants. "Cornercracker," driven by Chas. McMullen finished first in both heats.

Farmers are not getting along very rapidly with their ploughing, owing to the land being so dry.

Mrs. S. Cronk has sold her farm on the Front road to George Beaubieu.

No service was held in the Methodist church on Sunday, Sept. 27th, during the absence of Rev. Dr. Porter.

John Saunders has been spending a few days in Cataragui.

Mrs. Capt. T. Saunders and Mrs. A. E. Howard left on Wednesday for Buffalo and Cleveland, Ohio, where they will spend a few weeks.

EXPLANATION.

The Lennox and Addington Patriotic Fund is for the purpose of helping the families and dependents of soldiers, who have or will join the overseas Canadian Contingent, and the Relief Committees, have a further discretionary power to make such recommendations for exceptional relief work as may be brought to their notice.

APPEAL FOR OUR ALLIES.

In accordance with the notice in last week's paper, the members of the above Committee again beg to call the attention of the public to the matter of relief for our brave and gallant allies, the poor, suffering and destitute Belgians, and renew the appeal on their behalf therein made.
Financial aid, or donations of cast-off clothing, in good condition, (of course that which has not been subjected to any contagion,) or portable food, such as canned goods, or package food, etc., will be gladly received.

Those desiring to make contributions for this worthy cause, will kindly send same to our Headquarters room, (Harshaw Block, one flight up) where it will be packed listed, and despatched to the proper authorities for transmission for the relief of the Belgians.

DONATIONS OF WORK, ETC.

Generous donations of various kinds have recently been received by the Committee, from the following ladies and others: Mrs. G. B. Curran, Mrs.
F. S. Wartman, Miss Locklin, Miss
Bain, Miss Minnie Smith, Mrs. L.
Gould, 1 pair of socks from wool furnished by Committee, also 3 night shirts from material furnished by same from Mrs. Curle, Morven.

DONATIONS FROM OUT-OF-TOWN

FRIENDS.

A most generous donation was received a short time since from the women of Newburgh, Yarker and Camden East through the kindness and exertions of Mrs. R. W. Spencer, of the latter place, consisting in part of: 1 bale containing 44 pillows, 1
bale of woollen comforts for soldiers, 1 bale containing socks, pillow cases,
soldiers mending-kits or house wives, slippers for convalescents, shirts, hot water bags, 1 box of bandages and factory cotton and many other useful articles. Not having as yet received a complete list from Mrs.
Spencer, it is impossible to give all details, as in many cases, the names of donors are unknown to us.

A very useful and valued donation from Bath, Ont., has just been received through the kindness of Mrs. A. L.
McTear, viz: 1 muffler, Miss Ruth Davy, 1 muffler, Miss Hilda McTear, 1
Balaclava Cap, Miss Bessie McTear, 1

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chamber,

Oct 5th, 1914.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening, Mayor Alexander in the chair.

Present—Reeve Denison, and Councillors Wiseman, Waller, Carson, and Dickinson.

The minutes of the last regular session were read and confirmed.

F. W. Barrett, constable, asked the council to grant him ten days' leave of absence. Granted.

T. G. Carscallen, M.P.P., and others petitioned the council to construct a cement walk on the west side of Donald street running north from the residence of T. G. Carscallen.

Moved by Reeve Denison, seconded by Coun. Waller, that the walk be constructed from Dundas street to Bridge street. Carried.

On motion of Coun. Waller, seconded by Coun. Wiseman, the Chief of Police was given instructions to have a notice placed in the local press warning the citizens against dumping rubbish on the street. Hereafter all parties offending in this direction will be prosecuted.

On motion of Coun. Waller, seconded by Reeve Denison, the W.C.T.U., was granted the use of the town hall for the holding of a rummage sale in the near future.

On motion of Coun. Waller, seconded by Coun. Wiseman, the Streets Committee were instructed to construct a five foot cement walk on the east side of Robert street from Dundas to Water street, weather permitting.

Moved by Coun. Waller, seconded by Coun. Wiseman, that the Waterworks Company be notified of the unsatisfactory condition of the water service, and ask that immediate steps be taken to have the evil remedied. Carried.

War Office Announces Numerous Engagements Against German Forces Which Sought to Enter
Protectorate and Cut Uganda
Railway—Enemy Abandon Town
Before British Advance.

LONDON, Oct. 6. — Successes of British forces in Africa over German are told in an official announcement made yesterday afternoon by the War Office. The announcement is as follows:

"During September a number of engagements took place on the African-German boundary of the East African Protectorate. The activity has been due to the efforts of the Germans to raid the British territory in order to cut the Uganda Railway. With the exception of one important frontier station by a small party of the enemy, the entry of which it was expedient to oppose, all the attempts at invasion by the Germans have been repulsed.

"The normal garrisons of the East African Uganda Protectorate have been strengthened by powerful bodies of Indian troops and by mounted unmounted volunteers, raised locally.

"One of the earliest moves of the enemy was an attempt to blow up the Uganda Railway at Maungu. The invading party was broken up before it did any damage. Their dynamite was captured after a hot engagement.

"An engagement occurred on September 6, at Tsavo, in which the enemy was severely handled and eventually repulsed. The Indian troops show conspicuous bravery.

"A second German force of 400, including 50 Europeans, occupied Kisumu on Sept. 11. A British column engaged the Germans the next day, but was compelled to retire.

"Germans abandoned Kisumu on September 13, and retired to Karungu, where they later evacuated.

"Activities were recommenced in the Tsavo region on Sept. 20. The Germans attacked at dawn, but were beaten after two hours exchange of rifle fire. The conduct of the King's African Rifles was splendid.

"The Germans attacked the British outposts at Majoreni on Sept. 23 and were repulsed. Further fighting occurred on Sept. 25.

"In engagements near Magadi on Sept. 26 the enemy was repulsed with heavy loss."

PRINCE GOT AWAY.

Eitel Friedrich Has Family Faculty For Evading Capture.

PARIS, Oct. 6.—When the German troops occupied Coulommiers they took the chief officials of the town as hostages for an indemnity of $20,000. The officials protested that it was impossible to provide this, as all the wealthy inhabitants had left. The German general threatened to have the hostages shot, but in the midst of this scene a tall young officer entered. Gen. Von Kluk clicked his heels and saluted. Then followed a short colloquy with the unknown officer, to whom the general showed an extraordinary deference. The hostages were led out into the street and placed with their backs against a wall while twelve soldiers covered them with rifles. For nearly twenty minutes the hostages faced the muzzles of the rifles, not knowing when the officer's sabre would fall, giving the signal for their death.

Suddenly from above came the drone of an aeroplane. The aviator descended. He brought bad news. The British forces were approaching in great strength. The Germans, forgetting their prisoners, made a dash for their quarters, and half an hour later they evacuated the town in something like a panic. One of the first to leave was the tall young officer to whom Von Kluk had shown such great deference. Mounted on a fine horse, and striking to the left and right with his sabre, he forced his way through the terrified infantry. According to stories of German stragglers whom the British took prisoners, this young man who was in a hurry was Prince Eitel Friedrich, the Kaiser's second son.

News from the Russian headquarters says that the invasion of Hungary through the Carpathians is a two object. The first is to take the left flank of the Russian army operating against Przemysl and along the San river, and second, to open new field of action in the vast Hungarian plains where it can frighten the population, disturb the drilling Hungarian reservists and recruits and cut the railway communications, sides freely feeding an important position of the army from the resources of the country.

It is recalled that during the Russian-Turkish war of 1877, an expedition, commanded by Gen. Gour and mostly composed of cavalry, the same thing crossing the Balkan mountains and entering Eastern Rumania.

A despatch received here, speaking of the Russian invasion of Hungary says:—

"Having captured all the Carpathian passes, the Russians have commenced the invasion of Hungary. Advancing to the south they have occupied Hozsumezo. Then the Cossacks effected a daring coup. They crossed the river and cut the railway at Cziget, thus isolating the remainder of Hungary."

GEN. VON MOLTKE QUILTS

German Chief of Staff Succeeded by Gen. Voigtsrheth.

Unofficial Advice From Berlin Indicate Serious Trouble In German War Office, Which Results In Sudden Change of Leaders at Most Critical Moment — New Leader Does Not Figure In Official Lists.

LONDON, Oct. 6. — Gen. Voigtsrheth has been appointed chief of the German general staff to succeed Gen. Helmuth Von Moltke, according to unofficial advice from Berlin.

The deposed general is the nephew of the great leader who directed Prussian operations in 1870 which resulted in the defeat of France. On Jan. 1, 1906, he was appointed chief of staff. The elevation took place over his protest, it being said that Von Moltke did not feel himself fully qualified for the high command. However, he is credited with being an excellent soldier and has done a great deal to increase the efficiency of the German soldier.

Gen. Voigtsrheth, who succeeds him, is almost unknown. His name appears in none of the usual reference works. He is the son of a well-known commander of 1870 who led a division and afterwards became governor of Hanover. When he died an infantry regiment was named after him.

ard, commenting on the removal of Gen. Von Moltke, says:

"If this is true, it is news, indeed, for it will constitute a serious panic in high places. Even in minor affairs of the world, it is not often that the policy known as 'swapping horses while crossing a stream' is adopted.

"There must be something very gravely wrong indeed if the Germans find it necessary to get rid of the man who originated and directed the whole of the strategy of their campaign, and that at a vitally critical moment.

"One cannot, for instance, believe that Von Moltke of his own initiative and free will withdraw troops from France at a moment when they were urgently needed to secure a decisive

German Wing Administers Temporary Check to Allies.

French War Office Says Left Wing of Allies Has Been Obligated to Cede Ground at Certain Points But Does Not Divulge Place—Confidence of Victory Is Expressed by Experts in London.

LONDON, Oct. 6.—Gen. Von Kluk has at last delivered a successful attack, and the German right wing yesterday gained ground. The points lost by the allies are not known, but it is believed that the principal assault took place in the region between Roye and Arras, where both sides are reported to have massed great bodies of troops in the past few days.

The French official statement yesterday afternoon acknowledged a temporary check on the left wing of the allies. It is worded as follows:

"On the left wing, to the north of the Oise, the battle continues with great violence. The result remains indecisive. We have been obliged, at certain points, to cede ground.

"Along the remainder of the front there has been no change.

"In Russia, after a battle which lasted ten days, the German army which was operating along the eastern Prussian front and the Niemen river has been driven along the entire line and made its retreat, abandoning a considerable quantity of war material.

"This army has evacuated completely the territory of the Russian provinces of Suwalki and Lonja."

This change in the situation comes after several days of desperate fight-

LONDON, Oct. 6.—Among prisoners recently taken by the French is Major Von Manteuffel, who is said to have caused the destruction of Louvain. He was recognized by a Russian officer now with the French staff, who formerly knew him at Petrograd when he was stationed there.

of the world, it is not after the policy known as 'swapping horses while crossing a stream' is adopted.

"There must be something very gravely wrong indeed if the Germans find it necessary to get rid of the man who originated and directed the whole of the strategy of their campaign, and that at a vitally critical moment."

"One cannot, for instance, believe that Von Moltke of his own initiative and free will withdraw troops from France at a moment when they were urgently needed to secure a decisive result in that area of war. Having withdrawn them, one cannot imagine Von Moltke sending them on a useless errand to East Prussia, when their presence in Galicia might have saved the Austrian army from disaster."

"But if he was responsible for such a fatuous policy, then supercession is not sufficient punishment. He should be sent to take a landsturm division into action."

ENGINEER TOOK SUBMARINE.

Left Note With Italian Builders That He Had Gone To Aid Russia.

ROME, Oct. 6.—The shipbuilding firm of Sangiorgio Shezla has informed the Italian Government that one of its engineers, accompanied by 15 workmen has seized a submarine being constructed for Russian and disappeared leaving a note saying they desire to fight in Russia's behalf.

The Government has sent a torpedo boat in chase of the submarine, but the pursuit has so far been ineffectual.

The submarine lacks stores. It has a tonnage of 300, and a speed maximum of 13 knots an hour.

Despite the secrecy which was attempted it has become known that the submarine disappeared Sunday afternoon, on the pretext that it was leaving to conduct wireless experiments. It cost about $75,000.

The task of conducting an official inquiry has been intrusted to Vice-Admiral Nicastro.

Official Inquiry Under Way.

LONDON, Oct. 6.—An official investigation is being made regarding the movements of a number of vessels which left American ports, carrying coal, presumably bound for ports which have not been reached. While there is no disposition on the part of the British Government to question the efforts of the United States Government to prevent the coaling of German warships by vessels from American ports, it is explained that every effort is being exerted to forestall a repetition of the coaling of the German cruiser Karlsruhe.

Three Charged With Assault.

ST. CATHARINES, Oct. 6.—Fred Person, Edmund McGrath, and Jas. Augerman, three youths of Merriton, accused of complicity in a brutal assault on John Marshall, a storekeeper on Sept. 4, with Angele Delori, an Italian, were yesterday committed for trial.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and in the surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo O. decisive. We have been obliged, at certain points, to cede ground.

"Along the remainder of the front there has been no change."

"In Russia, after a battle which lasted ten days, the German army which was operating along the eastern Prussian front and the Niemen river has been driven along the entire line and made its retreat, abandoning a considerable quantity of war material."

"This army has evacuated completely the territory of the Russian provinces of Suwalki and Lonja."

This change in the situation comes after several days of desperate fighting on the part of the allies, endeavoring to pierce the line of German communications and complete the enveloping movement begun on the Marne. This line centres at Aix-la-Chapelle and Cologne, extending northeast from Compeigne through Tergnier, St. Quintin, Maubouge, Liege, and thence to the two first-named points. The allies have taken and held a railway line running from Amiens to Arras, where it diverges east and cut into the territory held by the Germans. This line has proved of immense value in bringing troops to vital points.

The town of Douai reappears constantly in reports from the front. It is said that heavy reinforcements have been rushed to that town, and that the fighting in the vicinity is of the most sanguinary character. Douai is situated 15 miles northeast of Arras, midway between that town and Valenciennes, on the railroad route to Mons. This indicates a progressive advance north. The allies are in touch with Belgian troops in the southwestern section of that country, and by means of a branch road, which runs from Arras via Douai and thence to Lille, Courtrai and Ghent, will be able to push ahead.

The opinion is held that a severe blow to the German lines of communication would completely tie up the German defensive. For this reason Von Boehm and Von Kluk are making superhuman efforts to turn back their enemies, which they have done with some success. Until the points lost are made public, no conclusion can be given as to the true situation.

Both in London and in Paris there is the greatest confidence, although some surprise is displayed at the success of the Germans in preventing the outflanking movement. There is a feeling, however, that the Germans cannot extend their line much further north without weakening it at some point.

Naturally progress by either side must be extremely slow, for after every advance, no matter how slight, the troops making it must entrench themselves for protection against the shells from the enemy's guns posted in strong positions from one end of the line to the other.

The Daily Mail's correspondent in France reports fighting in and around Douai, and considers that if the French have reached Douai in force that the situation of the German general, Von Kluk, must be desperate.

"Gen. Von Kluk," the correspondent says, "has had all the reinforcements which could be spared him and yet finds himself outnumbered at every point. There are many indications from German prisoners, from French officers and from members of the British transport service, the combined testimony of whom it is difficult to disbelieve, that the German army is becoming demoralized."

"The timidity of the German outposts, who surrender when surprised is strong evidence of their demoralization."

says that despite the activities of German spies and rumor-mongers, there is no evidence to suspect active disloyalty in South Africa. Gen. De Wet and a number of the Hertzogites continue demonstrations against the Government, although the number of Hertzog's party are solid for Botha. The correspondent adds that the Boer commandos in German S. W. Africa, who have been raiding union police posts are not, as reported here on Saturday, led by a nephew of Gen. De Wet, but by an adventurer with an inglorious record from the Boer war.

Hon. Dr. W. J. Roche Recovers.

ROCHESTER, Minn., Oct. 6.—Hon. Dr. W. J. Roche leaves Tuesday for his home, after an extended stay in this city, during which he submitted to a very serious operation for kidney trouble.

Dr. Roche returns almost completely recovered from his ailment, and according to his daughter, who has been with him constantly, there is every indication that he will, in time, be fully restored to normal health.

Swiss Women Shoeblocks.

In England the shoeblock's calling has always been a monopoly of the men, but in at least one Swiss town it is invaded by women. On emerging from the railway station at Zurich one sees three middle-aged women kneeling at their wooden blocks, and eager to shine the travelers' boots. When no customers are forthcoming the shoeblockesses of Zurich spend their time knitting stockings, an industry closely allied to the main vocation of their lives.—London Globe.

When Youth Wanes.

Old age has many definitions, and middle age more. But you may take it that you are not really an old man so long as you take an interest in your personal appearance. There is not a nurse who does not know the sign of convalescence—when the patient wants to be shaved and put on a good appearance in this world. And so long as the man of sixty can take an interest in the latest tie—and tie it—he is preserving his youth.—London Chronicle.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Take this in liquid or tablet form as a tonic.

Mrs. Kate D. Richardson, of Beazley, Essex Co., Va., says, "I esteem it a pleasure to testify to the wonderful curative qualities of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. For some years I suffered greatly with weakness. I was treated by several physicians but gradually grew worse. One of my friends told me of the good results of your 'Favorite Prescription.' I went to the drug store and got a bottle, and after taking it, with the 'Pleasant Pellets,' I commenced to get better. I never knew what happiness was, for I was always sick and complaining and made others as well as myself unhappy. So you see what a debt I owe you!"

TRICK OF THE FUNNEL.

Blowing Out a Light Through It is Easy if You Know How.
To blow out a candle, using a funnel to blow through, seems a ridiculously easy thing to do. But ask any friend of yours to try it and see what happens. Ten to one he will try to blow through the cup so as to force his breath through the narrow neck of the funnel. As this is not an easy thing to do he will flatten mouth and nose in his endeavors, while trying to force his face into the small cup. Then he will reverse the funnel and blow into the neck, and when he does not succeed in extinguishing the light he will blow harder and harder and finally he will admit that he is beaten.
In blowing through the neck of the funnel he has directed the funnel directly at the light, so that the flame is exactly opposite to the place where the neck of funnel joins the cup. You, on taking the funnel from him, incline the funnel so that its upper edge is on a level with the light. You blow gently. The light is extinguished at the first puff without any of the desperate effort which your friend put forth.
If you ponder a moment you will realize why you succeeded and why your friend failed. His breath on entering the cup or funnel spread in all directions, and the tiny current of air was dispersed upward and downward, so that, as he neatly leveled the center of the funnel at the flame, no current of air ever reached it.
You, on the contrary, hold the upper wall of the funnel on a level with the flame. The current of air started by your breath, on reaching the edge of the wall, streamed onward in the direction given it by the restraining wall and on reaching the flame snuffed it out.—Boston American.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Walking on the Sea," in The Photo Drama of Creation, will readily appreciate the Pastor's line of thought.
The Psalm from which this text taken is Messianic; that is, it applies to the time of the inauguration of Messiah's Kingdom, said the Past Prophetically and symbolically it relates to the trouble incident to passing of sin and selfishness and inauguration of righteousness and peace under Christ's Mediator Kingdom. Whether the events predicted come to pass in our day or they were surely written for our instruction, as St. Paul declares.
The Psalm opens with the blessed assurance that "God is a very present Help in trouble." Those in covenant relationship with God through Christ may feel serene in every situation. Not merely in the final trouble, when Satan shall be bound, when sin and sorrow shall be brought to an end, will God be a Refuge for His saints, but at all times and under all circumstances.
"Therefore will we not fear." For this is the great torment of our race. It is the lash which the Adversary uses to drive away from God those who need His sympathy and love. God would have us love Him as our Father. As love, more love, perfect love, comes into our hearts, it correspondingly casts out the fear which the Adversary would inculcate in which has burned into men's minds and consciences the "doctrines of men," mentioned by St. Paul.
God's people might well be in trepidation if the Psalmist referred to literal mountains and seas; but his language is figurative. Under the Lord's guidance His people will be in darkness, that the Day of the Lord shall overtake them as a thief, although as a snare will it come upon the whole world.
Biblical Symbology Explained.
In Scripture symbology the earth represents the social structure the mountains symbolize kingdom and the sea the restless, turbulent dissatisfied masses that lash against the social structure and continue to seek to swallow it up. The removal of "earth" symbolizes the disturbance of the social order; "the mountains carried into the sea" represents the overwhelming of great kingdoms and anarchistic uprisings.
The Pastor explained that we are not to understand that the Bible counsels revolution or anarchy. The contrary, God's people are instructed not to use carnal weapons but to suffer injury; for God, the great Over-Lord, is Master of the situation, and at any time can overthrow all opponents.
The Psalmist goes on to describe the tumult of that day of overwhelming trouble when God's Kingdom will be established. Of the "sea" that will swallow mountains he says "The waters thereof roar and are troubled; the mountains shake with the swellings thereof." Probable such socialistic and anarchistic movements have many times caused the

Sept. 20.—Pastor Russell discoursed to-day on the symbolic language of the Psalms. His text was, "Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea." (Psalm 46:2.) Those who have seen the beautiful film, "Christ

doms and kings to tremble; but some day, according to Scripture, the final catastrophe will occur. Who can tell how near that day may be! Many Bible students hold that according to prophecy such a climax will be reached in 1915.

Rather than harass men's minds with fear, the speaker would point them to the glorious "silver lining" of Millennial joy behind this cloud of trouble. He would encourage God's consecrated people to faithfulness and zeal. Christ's Gospel is not a message of damnation, fear and torture, but "Good Tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people."

The Deliverance of the Church.

In verses 4 and 5 the Psalmist pictures the Church as the City of God and the Truth as a river. The proclamation is made, "God shall help her early in the morning"—of the Millennium, when her salvation as the Bride of Christ shall be accomplished.

Beginning with verse 6 is a synopsis of the Time of Trouble, its consummation and the inauguration of universal peace. Angry voices will arise from all classes; but God will answer the clamor of greed in both rich and poor, for their correction. As a result the social structure will disintegrate. But God will be with His people, both Spiritual and Natural Israel.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Oct. 5.—Severe drought in Australia had much to do today with making the wheat market ascend. The outcome was a firm close at $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ above Saturday night's level. Corn lost $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ net; oats finished $\frac{1}{4}$ off, and provisions irregular, varying from $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ decline to a rise of $\frac{1}{4}$.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 5.—A bull market, with a good demand for all grades of grain and a fair export trade, marked the opening of the week. Wheat prices opened $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ higher. There was a heavy decrease in world's shipments from last year—bad news from Australia and Argentina, a heavy decrease in local receipts, and a 365,000,000-bushel deficit in Europe—so the bulls came down with their horns on. Closing prices were $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ higher for wheat, unchanged to $\frac{1}{8}$ higher for oats, and $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ lower for flax.

coursed to-day on the symbolic language of the Psalms. His text was, "Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea." (Psalm 46:2.) Those who have seen the beautiful film, "Christ Talking on the Sea," in The Photogram of Creation, will readily appreciate the Pastor's line of thought. The Psalm from which this text is taken is Messianic; that is, it applies to the time of the inauguration of Messiah's Kingdom, said the Pastor. Prophetically and symbolically it relates to the trouble incident to the passing of sin and selfishness and the inauguration of righteousness and peace under Christ's Mediatorial Kingdom. Whether the events predicted come to pass in our day or not, they were surely written for our instruction, as St. Paul declares.

The Psalm opens with the blessed assurance that "God is a very present help in trouble." Those in covenant relationship with God through Christ may feel serene in every situation. Not merely in the final trouble, when Satan shall be bound, when sin and sorrow shall be brought to an end, will God be a Refuge for His saints, but at all times and under all circumstances.

"Therefore will we not fear." Fear is the great torment of our race. It is the lash which the Adversary uses to drive away from God those who heed His sympathy and love. God could have us love Him as our Father. As love, more love, perfect love, comes into our hearts, it correspondingly casts out the fear which the Adversary would inculcate and which has burned into men's minds and consciences the "doctrines of demons," mentioned by St. Paul.

God's people might well be in trepidation if the Psalmist referred to literal mountains and seas; but the language is figurative. Under the Lord's guidance His people will not be in darkness, that the Day of the Lord shall overtake them as a thief, although as a snare will it come upon the whole world.

Biblical Symbolism Explained.
In Scripture symbolism the term earth represents the social structure; the mountains symbolize kingdoms; and the sea the restless, turbulent, dissatisfied masses that lash against the social structure and continually seek to swallow it up. The removal of "earth" symbolizes the disturbance of the social order; "the mountains carried into the sea" represents the overthrowing of great kingdoms by anarchistic uprisings.

The Pastor explained that we are not to understand that the Bible counsels revolution or anarchy. On the contrary, God's people are instructed not to use carnal weapons, but to suffer injury; for God, the Great Over-Lord, is Master of the situation, and at any time can overthrow all opponents.

The Psalmist goes on to describe the tumult of that day of overwhelming trouble when God's Kingdom will be established. Of the sea that will swallow mountains he says, "The waters thereof roar and be troubled; the mountains shake with swellings thereof." Probably the socialistic and anarchistic roarings have many times caused kingdoms to-day on the symbolic language of the Psalms. His text was, "Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea." (Psalm 46:2.) Those who have seen the beautiful film, "Christ

Beginning with verse 6 is a synopsis of the Time of Trouble, its consummation and the inauguration of universal peace. Angry voices will arise from all classes; but God will answer the clamor of greed in both rich and poor, for their correction. As a result the social structure will disintegrate. But God will be with His people, both Spiritual and Natural Israel.

The Psalm closes with a picture of the world-wide devastation resulting from human selfishness and blindness. This trouble, however, will convince all that earth needs a strong Government that will enforce righteousness—the Messianic Kingdom.

Time Will Show.

Germany, according to a French journal, has adopted a new type of torpedo which can destroy the largest dreadnought.

Just Like the Salad.

A young man named Smith boarded with an emaciated aunt of ample years, who seemed to take the view that most any old thing was good enough to hash up for fodder. One day chicken salad was served, but it was merely another demonstration that there is nothing in a name.

"By the way, Mr. Smith," severely remarked the landlady, as the meal progressed, "how do you like the chicken salad?"

"That reminds me," irreverently answered Smith, "I bought a book today and told them to send it around here. Did it come?"

"Yes," replied the landlady, with a puzzled expression, "but why should the chicken salad remind you of it?"

"Coincidence, Mrs. Slymm," was the mean rejoinder of Smith. "The book is half calf, you know."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

They Seldom Do.

A half witted fellow living in one of our country villages makes it his business to attend all funerals and comment on them for days afterward. Recently he received an invitation to the wedding of a relative. The next day after the wedding a neighbor asked, "And how did the wedding go off, Jim?"

"Oh, there was a pretty fair crowd turned out, considerin' the weather," Jim answered solemnly. "Mary, she looked right nice, but I didn't think Bob looked very natural."—Indianapolis News.

Imitating Mamma.

While playing with a pair of shears little Laura severed one of the prettiest of her golden curls.

"My dear child, why did you do that?" asked Aunt Mary, who came to call soon afterward.

"I wanted 'em so I could take 'em off and hang 'em on the bureau," explained the little girl, "just like mamma does."—New York Globe.

The Wild Part.

"Hello, old man? Have any luck shooting?"

"I should say I did! I shot seventeen ducks in one day."

"Were they wild?"

"Well—no—not exactly; but the farmer was."—New York Globe.

Constipation

is an enemy within the camp. It will undermine the strongest constitution and ruin the most vigorous health. It leads to indigestion, biliousness, impure blood, bad complexion, sick headaches, and is one of the most frequent causes of appendicitis. To neglect it is slow suicide. a particularly horrible experience. Another well-recognized fact is the varying intensity of sleep. There is not only the difference between a light and heavy sleeper; it has been proved conclusively that the first hours of sleep are deeper than the rest, and that with the length the tendency to wake at any noise increases. From this follows the recuperative value of the few first hours of deep sleep and the explanation why men of great energy like Napoleon, Frederick the Great and Virchow were completely satisfied with a sleep of from three to four hours.

Reference was made to the well-marked division between the morning and evening worker. The one after a short deep sleep rises up fresh and ready for work. The other is tired and weak in the morning, grows more active in the course of the day, stays up late, and goes to sleep with difficulty. This, too, is the type of the nervous man, who is generally most capable for work at night, and of the "melancholiker," who is gloomy and bad tempered in the morning and happy only as the day draws on.

Continental English.

The idea that English is to be the universal language of the future seems to be spreading. Certainly thousands of Europeans struggle bravely with its rules and idioms. Here is a sample of the progress that has been made in one quarter. It is taken from the advertising matter that a large continental hotel publishes in the form of an elaborate illustrated booklet:

"Its spacious dimensions, exquisite comfort, elegant fashion of its furnishing, the unobjectionable prerogatives as to the produces of its kitchen and contents of its cellars, beside the distinguished managing, which, assisted by well experienced attendants, does its utmost in always duly treating—all this united already for many years past obtained a general renown, even abroad too."

L'Aiglon's Grave Neglected.

"L'Aiglon," the son of Napoleon, was unfortunate throughout his brief life, and his very memory is now neglected. He lies buried in Vienna, and his tomb is described by the correspondent of a French contemporary as a "melancholy spectacle." Only a copper plate attests to the fact that the little king of Rome is buried there, and not a flower decks the grave. This neglect is the more vivid inasmuch as the surrounding royal tombs, including that of his mother, who was an Austrian, are richly ornamented and surrounded with a luxurious growth of flowers.—London Globe.

A Late Book.

Mrs. Hoyt, who became the possessor of a fortune by the death of an aunt, did not like to admit her ignorance of any subject.

One afternoon she had a call from a prominent society woman, and the conversation turned upon books.

"Have you read Shakespeare's works?" asked the caller.

"Oh, yes, indeed," replied Mrs. Hoyt, "all of them—that is," she added hastily, "unless he has written something very lately."—National Monthly.

The Jailer's Report.

Shows that 95 prisoners were committed to jail during the past year. The annual report of the Jail-Governor, shows an increase over last year of 46 prisoners committed. There were 95 prisoners, 92 males and 3 females, committed for the year ending September 30th, 1914. There were 97 prisoners in custody during the year with a total number of 1811 days stay of all prisoners, and 8 males and 1 female remaining in custody on Oct. 1st, 1914. The number of prisoners confined varied from 15 to 1. The average cost of each prisoner's daily ration, was 81 cents a day.

Some Basic Principle of Agricultural Chemistry.

A pamphlet has been issued by the Central Experimental Farm, entitled, "The Farmer as a Manufacturer." It has been prepared by Mr. A. T. Stuart B.A., Assistant Chemist, who has presented a number of simple illustrations of the chemical processes that take place in vegetable and animal life. The processes are indicated by which the farmer, whose raw materials are but air, water and soil, is able to manufacture therefrom an apparently endless variety of product—both plant and animal. It is shown, however, that their composition is to be easily understood, consisting as they do of but four principal constituents. The nature of raw materials, the process of manufacture and the products discussed. Under the heading "Maintaining Fertility" it is pointing out that "the farmer must exercise extreme care if he would keep his soil in the highest condition of productiveness. Soil is the real guardian of the farmer's capital, and the security is absolute. Try as he may he cannot 'break the bank.' He may bring out temporary derangement and dividend for a while be suspended, but invariably under better management prosperity can be restored and perhaps even larger profits than ever secured." "Ottawa sent down word what wanted and the thing was through in approved Kaiser fashion. "If Cochrane had his way the Conservative Government in Ontario would have no more stable foundation than petty politics."

"Unless the Conservative party wishes to throw away all the advantages of an era of public service, will not tolerate hole-and-corner methods but will demand as its leader a man in whose hands the future of Sir Adam Beck's work be absolutely safe."

CENTREVILLE.

Everyone seems to enjoy this beautiful weather, especially those past moonlight evenings. James Weese has made a large excavation on the corner lot. Mr. Joe Lockridge has rented a farm near Forest Mills. The farmers around here are finishing their threshing for the season. A few from here attended the Odessa Fair on Friday last, and report it a grand success. P. Cassidy has been erecting a large shed the past week. We are earnestly praying for an extension of our rural telephone lines. The Eddie Turney Variety Co. of Kingston, gave a couple of exhibitions here during the week. J. Cavanaugh, lost a valuable horse last week. Rumor says a wedding next week.

MCDougALL—SILLS.

A very pretty autumn wedding was solemnized on Wednesday, September thirtieth, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Merle Sils, when their eldest daughter Otta Mabel, was united in marriage to Mr. C. B. McDougall, a prosperous merchant of Wallaceburg. Rev. C. E. Cragg, of Grace church, performed the ceremony. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in her gown of white Duchesse satin, with shadow lace and pearl trimmings, and carried a bouquet of white roses and wore the groom's gift, a pearl necklace. After the ceremony a dainty lunch was served in the dining-room by Mr. Caton, of Napanee. The bride's military suit was of navy blue gabardine, with taupe hat to match. The happy couple left on the 1.17 train for Toronto amid showers of confetti and good wishes for their future life in Wallaceburg.

Digging potatoes is the order of the day. A few of our young people took in the party at Mr. Casement's, Forest Mills, on Tuesday night. Miss Lucy Arnold, of Selby, is the guest of Miss Rose Lasher. A number from here took a trip up the track on Sunday last. Mr. Jim Cole and family and Mr. Irvine Hudson and family, of Deseronto, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Milo Cole on Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Percy Hartin spent a couple of days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Bawn, Croydon. Miss Olive Cole took tea with Miss Ruth Thompson last Sunday evening. Mr. Wilson McCracken left on Tuesday for Montreal. Mrs. David Hartin spent a few days with her father, Mr. Jim Arnold, Deseronto. Mr. and Mrs. George Mowers and daughter, Gertie, of Marlbank, spent Saturday with their daughter, Mrs. Ralph Thompson. Mr. Clare Bradshaw made a flying trip to Marlbank last Sunday evening. Mr. Walter Thompson is going in partnership with Mr. Milo Cole in the baking business. Mr. John Storey spent Sunday and Monday the guest of Mrs. George Baldwin. Rumor says a wedding soon.

Robert Rogers in Manitoba. In hot cases it is for the lowest ends of organized machine politics. Under such domination from Ottawa Sir Adam Beck knows what to expect. In the Hearst Government under the Cochrane domination the Beck policy has no chance.

"Mr. Hearst begins his race but heavily weighted and hamstrung." "Ontario has a political boss for the first time in almost fifty years." "Kaiser Cochrane" and the "putt Premier" are to be introduced as characters in a political opera by V. F. McLean, with incidental music by the Editor of the Telegram.

TORONTO STAR—"The new Premier of Ontario, like the new King of A bania, seems to have been selected by the powers."

"It was feared, we suppose, that legislative caucus if called might give trouble."

"The only safe and democratic way is to allow the majority upon the death of their leader, to elect his successor."

Most inauspicious in many respects is the opening of the Hearst regime. The chief difficulty comes from adverse criticism in the ranks of the Conservatives themselves. Some of the Government papers look upon the new era not as a Hearst administration so much as a Cochrane-Hearst regime.

It seems to be an admitted fact that the appointment of a successor to Sir James Whitney instead of being made democratically by a caucus of the Conservative members of the Legislature, was arranged from Ottawa. Even the Toronto News, (Conservative) excuses this on the ground that Sir James Whitney himself always regarded the Conservative part in Ontario as part of a national organization. This is not fair to Sir James Whitney's deserved reputation for independence, but it is a line of defense made necessary by the embarrassing position in which the Government is now put. The World and the Telegram, both Conservative, are outspoken in their protests against the interference from Ottawa. The former refers to Cochrane's nominee (now Prime Minister) as a "putty man" and the latter exclaimed "Surely the members of the Ontario Legislature are big enough to resent meddling from Ottawa."

Of interest equal to the appointment of Prime Minister is the disappearance of Sir Adam Beck from the Cabinet. Gloss it over as the Government is undoubtedly trying to do it is easy to see that public opinion throughout the Province is suspicious. Cochrane has always been regarded as a "corporation" politician. Indeed, the Telegram says openly that at Ottawa "He has been more of a hindrance than a help to the Hydro Electric policy." It is this man's nominee, this man's "Friday," who is now Prime Minister. Does this not go a long way to explain Beck's absence from the Government? Sir Adam to-day is only a private member. His influence is that much reduced and this curtailment of his power is unpopular with the people.

Hon. W. J. Hanna, formerly the chief man in the limelight and the acknowledged successor to Sir James Whitney when the latter would retire, is strangely out of the mainstream these days. The "Proudfoot" and "Snider" investigations have made a big change for the Province Secretary, a change which must to him be most unwelcome.

MILLIONS OF MISTAKES.

Errors Which Are Constantly Being Made by Well-Informed People.

Has it ever occurred to you that in ordinary everyday conversation we often use phrases and make statements which are, scientifically, absolutely wrong?

For instance, what a number of people there are who talk about "lead pencils."

Nowadays, there is no such thing. When pencils were first made real lead was used for the centre, but experience showed that this was too easily broken, and at the same time very dirty, so another substance had to be found. Modern pencils are made of graphite. Sometimes this is mixed with clay to make a harder variety. Of course, neither clay nor graphite has any connection with lead, so the name "lead pencil," though used every day, is now quite out-of-date.

When water is boiling, say in a kettle, a white cloud comes out of the spout.

What is this cloud made of? Nine people out of ten will say "It is steam." They will be wrong. The cloud is made of water vapor. The word "steam" has a particular meaning, and ought only to be applied to the vapor rising from boiling water. Such vapor is the same temperature of the water, and is quite invisible. The moment it begins to cool it condenses, forming very small drops, so light that they are suspended in the air. A great many of these, seen in a mass, have a white appearance.

The difference can be well seen in an engine blowing off steam. Just above the funnel there seems to be a space. This is filled with invisible steam, which, as soon as it has begun to cool, forms the minute drops that are visible as the white cloud.

If you ask the average man to define a volcano he will probably answer "It is a burning mountain."

Now if this were the case one would expect the mountain to burn away in time; but tendency is for the volcano to become larger by the addition of lava thrown out by the crater.

In olden times men used to see active volcanos giving off smoke and what seemed to be huge flames, so they naturally imagined that the whole thing was on fire.

When a volcano is active the crater is quite open, and for the time molten red-hot rock is exposed. The seething mass is continually giving off gases, water vapor and smoke. These, as they rise over the crater, reflect the glow of the red-hot rock, and might easily be mistaken for flames.

How often we hear pearls referred to as "precious stones." The word "precious" applies, certainly, but strictly speaking it is quite wrong to call a pearl a stone.

Stones belong to the mineral kingdom, and have nothing to do with life of any kind; while pearls owe their very existence to certain kinds of animals.

They are made by some shell animals such as the oyster.

You will have noticed how unfamiliar the phrase "shell animal" is in the above paragraph. One always hears oysters referred to as "shell fish."

Real fish, of course, are much more highly organized than oysters, the chief indication being that their skeletons are inside their bodies instead of outside in the form of a shell.

Nearly everyone makes the mistake of calling a whale a fish. He is not a fish at all, but belongs to the same class as the horse, dog, and even man. He is a mammal.

proposition that nothing ancient must be disturbed.

The Divine authority of the Church and "the Divine right of kings" will not be permitted to conflict. Any person or teaching out of harmony with these unscriptural claims will be branded as everything vile. Nobler sentiments will be strangled by the philosophy of the same evil spirit that spoke through Calaphas. As he declared it expedient to commit crime to be rid of Jesus and His teachings, so this frog "spirit" will approve of every violation of principle necessary to their self-preservation.

For a brief time free speech, free mails, etc., will be shut off under plea of necessity, the glory of God,
the command of the Church, etc.
All will be serene until the great explosion occurs, denominated in Scripture "a great earthquake" and "a Time of Trouble such as was not since there was a nation." At this juncture Divine Power will marshal the hosts to Armageddon — the Mount of Destruction — the very thing they sought to avert. Then Michael—Messiah—will assume authority. (Daniel 12:1.) He will take possession of His Kingdom in a manner little expected by many who erroneously have claimed to be that Kingdom.

Unexpected Testimony.

A farmer had an old horse that he wanted to sell, so, having doctored it up to make it appear as young as possible, he soon found a purchaser. The latter before taking away the horse told the farmer that he should like to ask the carter a question or two. Imagine the surprise of both buyer and seller when that worthy in reply to a question as to the qualities of the horse blurted out:

"Why, maister, I've known this boss for twenty years, and I've never knowed un kick or bite!"—Pearson's Weekly.

Short and to the Point.

A coal merchant who was a man of few words once wrote to an agent the following brief letter:

"Dear Jones—"

In due time the agent's reply came as follows:

"Dear Mr. Sinclair—"

The coal dealer's letter, translated, said, "See my coal on," which is the semicolon expressed verbally.

The agent informed the dealer that the coal was shipped by saying simply, "Col-on."

Unreasonable.

"Why did you divorce your first husband?"

"He did not remain around home enough."

"And your second?"

"He remained at home too much."

"But I should not think that would be an objection?"

"But he wants me to remain at home also."

Nicely Steered.

Sarcastic.

His Old Typewriter.

"Would you like to get rid of your old typewriter?"

"Not just yet. I only married her last week."

Candid Criticism.

Mr. G. A. Storey, the well known artist, once told an amusing story of a family group he painted one year for the Academy. The picture was accepted and was hung "on the line," and he arranged to escort the family to the Academy to see how it looked. They were all grouped round the picture, each silently admiring his or her own portrait, when two other people drifted up to have a look.

Suddenly Mr. Storey was appalled to hear one of the newcomers say to his companion, "What an exceedingly ugly looking lot of people!"

Creation, now on exhibition in our large cities.

God has given us the Book of Revelation, the speaker declared, with the intent of covering up important truths not due to be understood until His appointed time. Being a book of symbols, it will not be understood by mankind in general; but we are assured that the wise amongst God's people shall understand.—Daniel 12:1-10.

The Prophet Daniel gives two signs by which this time will be marked, "Many shall run to and fro" and "Knowledge shall be increased." To-day we see this prophecy fulfilled. Thus our day is characterized as the Time of the End, when this Gospel Age closes and the Messianic Age begins—the time when God's people will understand the situation and will prepare for their change.

God has seen fit to associate the name of Israel's famous battlefield with the great controversy between Truth and Error, Right and Wrong, with which this change of dispensation will take place. While the phrase, "Battle of Armageddon," is applied in many ways to-day, Christians realize that the Bible uses it in a spiritual sense, and that now is surely the time to view this "Battle of the great Day of God Almighty" from its religious standpoint.

The Pastor emphatically declared that in setting forth his understanding of the symbols of Revelation he was saying nothing whatever against godly Christians at any time, in any place, in or out of any church. He realizes that God's Word conveys a most terrible arraignment of some great systems which we have revered, which we have esteemed as containing many of God's people. What he has to say in the interpretation of Scripture is merely in respect to these systems; and therefore he urges all to distinguish clearly between systems and individuals.

Agencies Mustering the Forces.

Revelation 16:13-16 was next discussed. There three agencies are mentioned as gathering the host for Armageddon. Three impure "spirits," teachings, proceeding from the mouths of the Dragon, the Beast and the False Prophet, exercise a mighty influence throughout the civilized world, and gather kings to battle.

Ecclesiastical kings and princes, with their retinue of clergy and faithful adherents will gather in solid phalanx—Protestant and Catholic. Kings and captains of industry, with all whom they can influence, will join them. Political kings and princes, with their henchmen and retainers, will gather to the same side. Financial kings and merchant princes, with all whom they can influence by the most gigantic power known in history, will also join them, according to this prophecy. They do not realize that they are hurrying to Armageddon.

Bible students of nearly all denominations agree with us that the "Dragon" of Revelation symbolizes the purely civil power, said the Pastor. Protestant interpreters agree with us that the "Beast" represents Papacy. But few, we fear, support our view that Protestantism is the "Image of the Beast," otherwise styled "the False Prophet."

Applying these symbols, we learn that an evil influence will come from the federated Protestant churches, the Church of Rome and the civil authorities—in full agreement. All will predict dire results if their counsel be not followed. Creedal differtrated by famous cartoons, many of which are reproduced in The Photo-Drama of Creation, now on exhibition in our large cities.

Personality and Character.

There is a difference between "personality" and "character." Personality is the larger thing and includes character. By personality is meant the mysterious entity going to make up one's being, or nature. It is equivalent to self consciousness, or individualized being. Character, on the other hand, strictly defined, means the attributes of the individual, as the "character" for intelligence, judgment, moral rectitude, and so forth. In a word personality is the more metaphysical, character more ethical.

His Mite of Sense.

"Well, gentlemen," said Tompkins to a couple of his friends, "you can talk as much as you please about the inferiority of women, but there are lots of them that can discount most of us for brains. Take my wife, for instance. She's got twice as much brains as I have, and I ain't ashamed to acknowledge it, either."

"But don't you think," said one of his auditors, "that you put rather a low estimate on your wife's intellectual powers?"—Liverpool Mercury.

"I's got no home," retorted the offending driver. "Now what yo' gonna do 'bout dat?"

CRUSHING THE KAFFIRS.

Treated Like Slaves, Even by White Children in South Africa.

In "The Real South Africa" the author, Ambrose Pratt, says that the Kaffirs are not only enslaved by the Boers, but it would seem also by the other whites, who ought to know better. The white children born in South Africa acquire incurable habits of pride and indolence before they reach their teens. Their manners are haughty and overbearing:

"The first day I landed in South Africa I witnessed a small incident that will tell its own story. Strolling through the city of Durban in the early morning I saw a great hulking Kaffir carrying a bundle of papers to the door of a news agency, where a little boy about ten years of age was waiting to receive them. The Kaffir very respectfully placed the bundle on the steps at the child's feet and moved away. He was immediately recalled and most imperiously. 'You cheeky devil!' shrilled the child. 'How dare you leave the papers there! Take the bundle into the shop at once and untie it!' The Kaffir silently and humbly obeyed.

"Now sort the papers!" ordered the child.

"Again the Kaffir obeyed. When his task was completed the little boy contemptuously pointed to the door. 'Get out!' he said.

"The Kaffir inclined reverently and backed out of the shop as though taking leave of royalty. The child did not even smile. The sneer on his face was fixed."

"You hear them talk of lion hunting in Africa as though it were the king of sports. It's a beastly shame the way they treat the poor beasts. Why, when I was out in British East Africa two years ago there was a movement on foot to punish lion hunters for cruelty to animals. In fact, they were seriously taking up the question with the home government.

ORIGIN OF METALS

Varied Theories as to How the Ores Are Formed.

NATURE HIDES THE SECRET.

Science Has For Centuries Tried to Wrest It From Her, but Geologists and Mineralogists Are as Yet Unable to Agree Upon the Process.

You have read of that legendary Indian who while chasing game on a Bolivian mountain side seized a bush to prevent himself from falling, and, the bush being pulled loose from its scanty hold on the rocks, he saw its crooked roots grasping masses of gleaming white ore and thus became the discoverer of the famous silver mines of Potosi.

You have also read, perhaps with itching fingers, of prospectors picking up nuggets of gold worth a thousand dollars each or opening veins of quartz all shot through with heavy threads of the yellow metal.

You know that ores of gold and silver or of any other precious or useful metal are not to be found in everybody's back yard, but must be sought for in certain favored parts of the earth.

But has your intelligent curiosity ever led you to inquire how those ores came to be where they are and nowhere else? Have you ever wondered what makes a gold nugget?

Possibly you think that gold and other metals grow somewhat as fruits do—in soils and climates that are specially suited to them. Well, there is considerable truth in that idea, and the word "grow" is, in one sense, surprisingly applicable to such deposits.

But there is a great deal more in the matter than you would imagine, and on no subject has science fought more battles royal than on this of the origin of metallic ores. I think that there are some geologists who would rather find out this secret to the very bottom than discover the richest lode that the ribs of the earth contain. If they could do both that would be perfection, and we must not forget that knowledge is power.

Until about 400 years ago everybody who thought about it at all believed that veins of precious ore were distributed under the influence of the planets. At that time astrology held the place of science.

Finally George Agricola, a German mineralogist, who lived about the time when the gold and silver of Mexico and Peru were making Spain the temporary mistress of the world, hit upon a theory which came in substance very near the truth. He taught that water, penetrating into the earth and becoming heated, took up scattered minerals in solution and afterward deposited them as ores in cavities in the rocks. The mineral solutions he called the earth's "juices."

A couple of hundred years later the German geologist Werner set forth a view that became very famous under the name of the "Neptunist theory," from Neptune, the god of the sea. Werner's idea was that as the earth cooled down from the primeval nebula out of which it was formed it was enveloped in a universal hot ocean, hold-

Why, when I was out in British East Africa two years ago there was a movement on foot to punish lion hunters for cruelty to animals. In fact, they were seriously taking up the question with the home government.

"The lives of the poor lions are being made a burden to them. I can remember when the lions would come in out of the jungle and sit on the platform of the railway stations, and some of those cruel Englishmen actually booted the beasts out of the way. Think of it, the cruelty of it all!

"There being no foxes available, the sportsmen out in those parts have a habit of stirring up a lion and pursuing the poor beast with whoops and yells until it drops dead of exhaustion and actual fright. The poor beasts have been so terrorized that when they see a white man they whimper from fright. This fear shortens the life of the lions, and unless drastic steps are taken to put a stop to the cruelty there won't be any of the animals left in Africa."—New York World.

SURGICAL SHOCK.

Only In a Vague Way Does Science Know What Causes It.

Shock is still one of the great mysteries of surgery. Many theories have been put forward to explain just what it is. Each of these has seemed attractive until its inherent defects were discovered by experience.

In a lecture before the British Royal College of Surgery Dr. A. Rendle Short reviewed these successive theories and described the experiments of himself and others by which they were disproved. But researches by Dr. Crile of Cleveland, Professor Sherrington of England and Dr. F. H. Pike of Columbia university, New York, seemed to him to offer at least a clew to the real nature of shock.

Professor Short did not formulate a definite theory, but suggested that surgical shock was due to an inhibiting or paralyzing of the important nuclei in the region of the fourth ventricle of the brain and perhaps in the cerebellum. These are "continually sending impulses down the spinal cord, maintaining its functional activity and increasing muscular tone." The effect of this paralysis is to cut off these impulses, whereupon the functions of the spinal cord are greatly reduced, muscular tone is abolished, and as a secondary result the blood pressure may fall. The respiratory center and perhaps also the vasomotor center share in this inhibition or paralysis.

"Death," said Dr. Short, "is due to the accumulation of blood in the great veins," so that the flow does not provide a proper filling for the heart.—New York World.

ing heated, took up scattered minerals in solution and afterward deposited them as ores in cavities in the rocks. The mineral solutions he called the earth's "juices."

A couple of hundred years later the German geologist Werner set forth a view that became very famous under the name of the "Neptunist theory," from Neptune, the god of the sea. Werner's idea was that as the earth cooled down from the primeval nebula out of which it was formed it was enveloped in a universal hot ocean, holding in solution all kinds of minerals, and that when the rocky crust was formed the water leaking down into it deposited its metallic contents by chemical precipitation in veins and lodes wherever the circumstances were favorable.

But a hundred years ago the Neptunist theory, which had swept everything before it in the minds of men of science, met its Waterloo at the hands of Hutton, the Scottish geologist, with his "Plutonist" theory (from Pluto, the god of the infernal regions). Hutton's idea was that the materials which fill the metallic veins were melted by heat and forcibly injected into the clefts and fissures of the strata from below.

The "Neptunists" and "Plutonists" had a hard fight, with the latter holding the upper hand, until their theory had assumed a kind of compromise form, with water again playing the principal role. The American geologist, Van Hise, is the author of one of the latest theories, according to which meteoric water (condensed atmospheric vapor) penetrates deep into the earth's crust, and, with steadily increasing temperature, takes up mineral matter in solution. Spreading, as it gets deeper, the water reaches larger openings in the rocky crust, in which it ascends, with decreasing temperature and pressure.

There it deposits the ores, whose materials it has collected in its wanderings and carried along in solution.

But this is not the last word, and in recent years there has been a partial reaction toward the Plutonist theory. Besides, a great deal seems to depend upon the nature of the ore whose origin is in question.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York Journal.

BOY A MUSICAL GENIUS

WILLY FERRERO HAS TAKEN OLD WORLD BY STORM.

Seven-Year-Old Child Who Conducts Great Orchestras Through the Most Difficult Symphonies—Child Virtuosi Are Common Enough But a Mere Babe Directing Ninety Grown Men Is Startling.

Something quite new in the way of child prodigies is Willy Ferrero, the extraordinary seven-year-old boy who has been conducting the New Symphony Orchestra at the Albert Hall, London, Eng.

He has become, at any rate for the moment, the most talked of small boy in England, if not in Europe. He has hobnobbed with the greatest living musicians, he has conducted before the Tsar, who gave him a gold watch, and has been to tea with Queen Alexandra.

We have had lots of prodigies before—child violinists, child pianists, child actors, child dancers, and we are bored stiff with most of them.

But Willy Ferrero is really a novelty. He is the first boy of seven or generations if not the first on record, to conduct an orchestra of ninety grown men, and to make them play pieces as he wants to have them played. Not easy, simple pieces, either, but the music of Wagner, Beethoven, Berlioz and Elgar.

Willy conducting is an extraordinary sight. At first it appeals to you as being rather funny, but he is so solemnly serious about it that unconsciously you regard it seriously, too; you become seriously critical, and then you seriously appreciate what he is doing.

There he stands, a tiny figure in a white suit in the vast immensity of the Albert Hall, his baton in his hands, beating time with all the gestures and mannerisms and methods of a grown conductor.

Willy knows the music thoroughly. He makes no slips. He gives each orchestral group its cues with absolute precision. More than that, he has the pieces played as he wants them played. At the practices, if the orchestra does not render a passage exactly as he wants it, he stops them and makes them play it over again.

He says "we will have this passage egato," and the orchestra has to obey well give him the tempo he demands. He gestures for the drum at the moment he wants the drum to come in—and if the drummer fails to please him there is trouble. He is quite formidable this child of seven.

He has been gifted instinctively with the power, the control that men who have spent their lives studying conducting sometimes fail to acquire.

At the first practice some of the players tried to hoax him by intentionally playing wrong notes. But he "spotted" them and pulled them up instantly.

Once or twice when the orchestra failed to get the effect he wanted he stopped them all, and, leaning back in his chair, twiddled his baton between his fingers with the air of exasperated despair you would expect from a conductor of eighty or so.

"Oh, stop, stop, stop!" he cried. "That's all wrong! It's impossible! We must have it all over again!"

The extraordinary thing is that he does not know a note of written music. He cannot tell A from E. He could not read a score to save his little life. He cannot even read or write the letters of the alphabet, and absolutely refuses to learn.

DEMONSTRATION CAR.

Containing the Wool and Egg Exhibits of the Live Stock Branch, Dominion Department of Agriculture, to be run over the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces.

As a result of the success, which has attended the presentation of the Wool and Egg Exhibits of the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, at the larger Western Fairs this summer, arrangements have been made in co-operation with the Canadian Pacific Railway to place these exhibits before the people of the Eastern Provinces through the medium of a Demonstration Car. This car will leave Ottawa on or about the middle of October and will be operated over the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway, stops being made at a large number of important agricultural centres. The detailed itinerary is now being arranged and further announcement of the date of the arrival of the car at each point will be given later. The car will be in charge of Egg and Wool Specialists of the Poultry and Sheep Divisions, respectively, and Demonstrations will be given at each scheduled stop.

THE WOOL EXHIBIT.

The object of the wool exhibit is to assist farmers and city dwellers alike to gain a more complete and definite knowledge of the character of wools grown in this and other countries, and of the products manufactured therefrom. It will demonstrate how wool may be handled to secure the best advantages to both producer and consumer. Carelessness in the preparation of Canadian wool has resulted in an injury to its reputation upon the markets of the world. In an endeavor to overcome these conditions by aiding the wool growers of Canada to place upon the market a high grade product, the Sheep Division presents this exhibit to the public.

One of the most interesting and instructive features comprises samples of wool in both the greasy and scoured product, showing the injurious effects of using insoluble paints, which are difficult to remove. There are also samples of wool tied with binder-twine (sisal), which show how the sisal fibre becomes incorporated into the wool and the consequent defect in the finished cloth. The injurious effect of shearing sheep while damp, or of permitting the wool to become wet while in storage is exhibited, together with the damage caused by the incorporation of straw and chaff into the fleece.

Representative fleeces of the most important breeds of Canadian sheep are shown; their character and staple being further displayed by means of smaller samples. The Canadian classification is also represented by fleeces of the different grades.

The process of woolen and worsted manufacture are illustrated by samples representing the intermediate product from the wool in the grease to the finished cloth. This serves to give the public an idea of the types of wool entering the different classes of fabrics.

THE EGG EXHIBIT.

The principal features of the Egg Exhibit are contained in two large show-cases, and strikingly illustrate right and wrong methods of marketing eggs. In one case, by means of models and appropriate descriptions are depicted the careless methods of handling eggs, prevailing on too large a number of Canadian Farms and in Country Stores. In this illustration the eggs are gathered in unsanitary and from questionable

THE HOMELAND'S CALL.

BY RONALD McCASKILL

MACLEAN'S MAGAZINE - OCTOBER 1914.

Hearken, ye whelps of the Lion!
Stir ye, awake from your dream;
Hark to the world-flung challenge.
List to the eagle's scream:
Thrown to the teeth of the nations
Terrible; menacing; grim:
Hear ye the words of defiance,
Hurled to the Empire's rim?
"Stand from the path of my southern mate,
Stand aside lest ye be too late
And I tear thee limb from limb."

Hearken, ye whelps of the Lion,
Hear ye his arrogant cry?
"Where is there one to dare me,
One who'll do battle and die?
Fear I the bear that was conquered,
Cowed by the small yellow man?
Heed I the squeaks of an upstart
I ground in the dust of Sedan?
Who talks to me of the Lion's sway?
A lion's cubs may be eagle's prey!
And mercy is none of my plan."

Hearken ye whelps of the Lion,
What says thy mother's roar?
"Who is this Teuton boaster
To prate so loud of war?
Long have I stood his insults,
Long have I leashed my might
But never brooked dishonored peace.
The time has come to fight!
Rise then ye whelps of the Lion's breed,
Thy mother's call is the Empire's need
And battle for the right!"

"Send me the men from the Southern Cross
Eager to do their part;
Send me my sons from the frozen north,
Men of the mighty heart.
Give me the men from the sun-baked veldt,
Bred to the rifle's crack;
Send me alike both rich and poor;
No fear that men I'll lack;
Making one cause with my sons at home,
Warring on land or on salt sea foam,
To fight for the Union Jack."

RENFREW'S THREE TEXTILE FACTORIES WORKING OVERTIME

The war has put new vim into the three textile factories at Renfrew, Ont.

Logans, Limited, a 60-year-old concern, which has been closed down for two or three weeks prior to the breaking out of hostilities, is now being operated at full capacity, day and night.

The Renfrew Knitting Company, where only a small portion of the staff had been employed for some time before the war began, is also running at full capacity, and with as much overtime as its eighty employees can stand.

In the plant of the Renfrew Textile Company also a temporary shutting down has been replaced by the employment of a full staff and considerable overtime.

While it is true that each of these three factories secured a share of the Dominion Government's textile order, the increased activities are largely due to increased orders from regular customers. All three factories report a considerable improvement in this direction since the breaking out of hostilities.

DOUBLE SHIFTS IN THE MERCURY MILLS

The war has not resulted in any falling off of business or curtailment of manufacture in the Mercury Mills, Hamilton, where hosiery and underwear are made. On the contrary, there has been a material increase in sorting orders, and a similar increase in the orders for next season's goods is expected. Night and day shifts are being employed, and the prospects for their continued employment are bright.

The Mercury Mills, in common with other Canadian hosiery manufacturers, also secured a share of the Canadian hosiery trade. The hosiery manufacturers of Canada have now an opportunity of securing this trade that formerly went to Germany and Austria-Hungary.

There is likely to be another opportunity for the extension of the business of Canadian hosiery manufacturers as a result of the curtailment of imports of hosiery from the United States into Canada. There have been heavy importations of hosiery into the United States from Germany

He stopped them all, and, leaning back in his chair, twiddled his baton between his fingers with the air of a xasperated despair you would expect from a conductor of eighty or so.

"Oh, stop, stop, stop!" he cried. That's all wrong! It's impossible! We must have it all over again!"

The extraordinary thing is that he does not know a note of written music. He cannot tell A from E. He could not read a score to save his little life. He cannot even read or write the letters of the alphabet, and absolutely refuses to learn.

It is astounding that he can conduct an orchestra through long and complicated pieces of music.

The secret, people who know him say, is that he has a most extraordinary musical memory. He hears a piece a few times. It is played over to him on the piano. He hears it on bands. Then he has it by heart. He can take an orchestra through it from memory just as some people can play on the piano, by ear, a refrain they have heard three or four times. It is the same sort of thing, but, of course, developed to an extent that has probably never been reached by anyone—certainly not by any child—before.

In addition to this, he has an instinctive sense of rhythm.

With this he makes his own interpretation of the different passages. He makes the music fit in with the time and tune that is running in his head.

He makes them fit in with his mood, too. He seldom, if ever, has a piece played twice in exactly the same way. And he will only deal with pieces that he likes.

Of course this extraordinary memory, this intense sense of rhythm, is a gift that amounts to genius in so young a child.

But although he has never been taught to read music he has certainly been taught musical terms, the arrangement of an orchestra, the methods of conducting. He could not have arrived at these by instinct.

As a matter of fact, he has been making in music from his babyhood.

At fifteen months old his mother played to him on the violin—she says most remarkably well. When he played sad pieces he cried, when he played gay ones he smiled. At eighteen months he would stand by a piano for hours listening while he played. When he was two he could "conduct" while his parents played the violin and piano together, and would exercise quite a certain amount of discretion in changing the tempo.

By the time he was four he conducted the orchestra at the Folies Bergères Theatre in Paris. At seven his parents took him from his native Berlin to St. Petersburg. There he conducted the Imperial Orchestra before the Russian court, won the interest of the Tsar, and took the most critical musical audiences in the world by storm.

And now his conducting of the new Symphony Orchestra in London has created the sensation of the musical season.

THE EGG EXHIBIT.

The principal features of the Egg Exhibit are contained in two large show-cases, and strikingly illustrate right and wrong methods of marketing eggs. In one case, by means of models and appropriate descriptions are depicted the careless methods of handling eggs, prevailing on too large a number of Canadian Farms and in Country Stores. In this illustration the eggs are gathered infrequently and from questionable places. They are held until it is convenient to carry them to market and are often traded on a flat-rate basis, for merchandise, at the Country Store where little or no attention is paid to their preservation. Here they are frequently held indefinitely, in anticipation of a rising market and often are shipped in damp and musty cases to the Wholesale Dealer where they are candled and graded. The result of the candling is indicated and it is to be noted that but a relatively small proportion grade "select". The manner in which the average retail grocer permits eggs to deteriorate is also pointed out, and if by chance, a portion of the uncandled eggs should have gone direct to the consumer the result is very evident.

The other case shows the results that may be obtained through the adoption of improved methods, not only on the farm and in the country store, but on the part of all those who handle eggs. The models show a flock of pure bred poultry kept in a clean, well ventilated poultry house, provided with clean nests from which the eggs are gathered frequently and regularly. The eggs are kept covered in a clean utensil in the coolest place in the farmhouse and marketed at least once, better twice, a week. In the country store they are packed in clean, dry cases and forwarded with the minimum of delay. The result of this careful management is apparent in the Candling Room of the Wholesale Warehouse where a decidedly large proportion of the eggs grade "select."

An additional and important feature of the Exhibit is a large candling booth, in which continuous demonstrations are given in the art of candling eggs. This phase of the work is of particular interest to consumers, for the reason that but few appreciate the fact that quality of an egg can be accurately determined without breaking the shell.

The candling of eggs is not a difficult process and the small amount of labor entailed in candling presents no valid reason why the consuming public should not candle their own eggs. It should be recognized that as a business requirement the wholesale trade regularly, candles and grades the product which it receives. Merchants generally, however, should acquire facility in candling and every housewife will find it to her advantage to attend one of these candling demonstrations. She will be interested in observing the methods practised and by obtaining one of the simple cardboard appliances which are distributed, free, she will be in a position to safeguard her family from many unpleasant occurrences at the breakfast table.

DOUBLE SHIFTS IN THE

MERCURY MILLS

The war has not resulted in any falling off of business or curtailment of manufacture in the Mercury Mills, Hamilton, where hosiery and underwear are made. On the contrary, there has been a material increase in sorting orders, and a similar increase in the orders for next season's goods is expected. Night and day shifts are being employed, and the prospects for their continued employment are bright.

The Mercury Mills, in common with other Canadian hosiery manufacturers, are being benefited by the shutting off of imports from Germany and Austria into Canada. During the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1914, the imports of hosiery from Germany to Canada were valued at upwards of half a million dollars. Austria-Hungary also secured a share of the Canadian hosiery trade. The hosiery manufacturers of Canada have now an opportunity of securing this trade that formerly went to Germany and Austria-Hungary.

There is likely to be another opportunity for the extension of the business of Canadian hosiery manufacturers as a result of the curtailment of imports of hosiery from the United States into Canada. There have been heavy importations of hosiery into the United States from Germany. These importations being cut off by the war, the hosiery manufacturers of the United States will have a greatly increased demand in their home market, and this is likely to result in a reduction in exports of hosiery from the United States to Canada.

ACTIVITY IN PAPER BOX BUSINESS INDICATES INCREASED ACTIVITY IN OTHER INDUSTRIES

The paper box business is a good barometer of business conditions generally because it quickly feels any marked increase or falling off in the shipping orders of the many articles that are packed in paper boxes. It is therefore, most encouraging to learn that the paper box manufacturers throughout the country are experiencing increased activity since the war began.

The Rudd Paper Box Company, for example, has increased its staff about 20 per cent, since the breaking out of hostilities, and in addition the employees in some departments are working overtime several nights a week. This company reports that the orders from manufacturers since the war began show a decided increase over the run during the previous six months. One customer, a manufacturer of a food product, has more than doubled his standing order of 200,000 boxes a month. Another customer has ordered 65,000 canisters as a three months' supply instead of his regular order of 7,500 canisters a month. Still another customer has placed an initial order of 50,000 boxes for a Made-in-Canada article that was imported from Germany before the war began.

The significant and encouraging fact in connection with the increased activities of the plants of the Rudd Paper Box Company, Limited, and other paper box manufacturers is not so much the increased activity in those plants in itself, as the great increase in the packing and shipping of orders by manufacturers generally that is indicated by the increased demand for paper boxes.

THE BULL-DOG STRAIN

The bull-dog is typical of the British race—men fearless in attack, grim and determined, tenacious, invincible. We in Canada are proud of the bull-dog strain in us—that quality of blood and heart that makes us dauntless and masterful. The bull-dog strain shows in us and others in times of peril and menace.

Everywhere in Canada manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers of the bull-dog breed are answering the challenges of war—the challenges of trade disturbance and business opportunity. The identity of some of these valiant-hearted merchants and manufacturers is revealed in the advertising columns of this and other newspapers, for advertisements are expressions of courage, tenacity and mastery.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Copyright, 1913, by Kate Douglas Wiggin

"Jed Morrill said they'd have to hold her under water quite a spell to do any good," chuckled Uncle Bart from the front seat.

"Well, I wouldn't repeat it, Bartholomew, on the Sabbath day, not if he did say it. Jed Morrill's responsible for more blasphemous jokes than any man in Edgewood. I don't approve of makin' light of anybody's religious observances if they're ever so foolish," said Aunt Abby, somewhat enigmatically. "Our minister keeps remindin' us that the Baptists and Methodists are our brethren, but I wish he'd be a little more anxious to have our society keep ahead of the others."

"Jed's 'bout right in sizin' up the Widder Tillson," was Mr. Day's timid contribution to the argument. "I ain't a readin' man, but from what folks report I should think she was one o' them critters that set on rocks bewilderin' an' bedevilin' men folks out o' their senses—syreens, I think they call 'em—a reg'lar syreen is what that woman is, I guess!"

"There, there, Abel, you wouldn't know a syreen if you found one in your baked beans, so don't take away a woman's character on hearsay." And Mrs. Day, having shut up her husband as was her bounden duty as a wife and a Christian, tied her bonnet strings a little tighter and looked distinctly pleased with herself.

"Abel ain't startin' any new gossip," was Aunt Abby's opinion, as she sprang to his rescue. "One or two more holes in a colander don't make much difference—Bartholomew, we're certainly goin' to be late this mornin'; we're about the last team on the road," and Aunt Abby glanced nervously behind. "Elder Boone ain't begun the openin' prayer, though, or we should know it. You can hear him pray a mile away, when the wind's right. I do hate to be late to meetin'." The elder allers takes notice; the folks in the wing pews allers gapes an' stares, and the choir peeks through the curtain, takin' notes of everything you've got on your back. I hope to the land they'll chord an' keep together a little wite better'n they've done lately, that's all I can say. If the Lord is right in our midst, as the Bible says, he can't think much of our singers this summer!"

"They're improvin', now that Pliny Waterhouse plays his fiddle," Mrs. Day remarked pacifically. "There was times in the anthem when they kept together consid'able well last Sunday. They didn't always chord, but there, they chorded some! We're most there now, Abby, don't forget! Cephas won't ring the last bell till he knows his own folks is crossin' the common!"

Those were days of conscientious hymn, full of sacred memories, like—

While thee I seek, protecting Power,
Be my vain wishes stilled,
And may this consecrated hour
With better hopes be filled.

"There may be them in Boston that can sing louder, and they may be able to run up a little higher than Waitstill, but the question is, could any of 'em make Aunt Abby Cole shed tears?" This was Jed Morrill's tribute to his best soprano.

There were Sunday evening prayer meetings, too, held at "early candle-light," when Waitstill and Lucy Morrill would make a duet of "By cool Siloam's shady rill," or the favorite "Naomi," and the two fresh young voices, rising and falling in the tender thirds of the old tunes, melted all hearts to new willingness of sacrifice.

Father, whatever of earthly bliss
Thy sov'reign will denies,
Accepted at thy throne of grace
Let this petition rise.

Give me a calm, a thankful heart,
From every murmur free.
The blessing of thy grace impart,
And let me live to thee.

How Ivory loved to hear Waitstill sing these lines! How they eased his burden as they were easing hers, falling on his impatient, longing heart like evening dew on thirsty grass!

CHAPTER X.

The Green Eyed Monster.

"WHILE Thee I Seek, Protecting Power," was the first hymn on this particular Sunday morning, and it usually held Patty's rather vagrant attention to the end, though it failed to do so today. The Baxters occupied one of the wing pews, a position always to be envied, as one could see the singers without turning around and also observe everybody in the congregation—their entrance, garments, behavior and especially their bonnets—without being in the least indiscreet or seeming to have a roving eye.

Lawyer Wilson's pew was the second in front of the Baxters in the same wing, and Patty, seated decorously but unwillingly beside her father, was impatiently awaiting the entrance of the family, knowing that Mark would be with them if he had returned from Boston. Timothy Grant, the parish clerk, had the pew in between and afforded a most edifying spectacle to the community, as there were seven young Grants of a churchgoing age, and the ladies of the congregation were always counting them, reckoning how many more were in their cradles at home and trying to guess from Mrs. Grant's lively or chastened countenance whether any new ones had been born since the Sunday before.

Patty settled herself comfortably and put her foot on the wooden "cricket," raising her buff calico a little on the congregation side, just enough to show an inch or two of petticoat. The petticoat was as modestly long as the frock itself, and disclosing a bit of it was nothing more heinous than a casual exhibition of good needlework. Deacon Baxter furnished only the unbleached muslin for his daughters' undergarments, but twice little tucks laboriously done by hand, elaborate inch wide edging, crocheted from white spool cotton and days of bleaching on the grass in the sun will make a petticoat that can be shown in church with some justifiable pride.

The Wilsons came up the aisle a moment later than was their usual habit, just after the parson had ascended the pulpit. Mrs. Wilson, always adorned ing of her preserves and pickles, and arranged her meals for the next week, during the progress of those sermons. Patty watched the parson turn leaf after leaf until the final one was reached. Then came the last hymn, when the people stretched their aching limbs and rising, turned their back on the minister and faced the choir. Patty looked at Waitstill and wished that she could put her throbbing head on her sisterly shoulder and cry—mostly with rage. The benediction was said, and with the final "Amen" the pews were opened and the worshippers crowded into the narrow aisles and moved toward the doors.

Patty's plans were all made. She was out of her pew before the Wilsons could possibly leave theirs and in her progress down the aisle securely annexed her old admirer, old Dr. Perry, as well as his son, Philip. Passing the singing seats, she picked up the humble Cephas and carried him along in her wake, chatting and talking with her little party while her father was at the horse sheds making ready to go home between services, as was his habit, a cold bite being always set out on the kitchen table according to his orders. By means of these clever maneuvers Patty made herself the focus of attention when the Wilson party came out on the steps and vouchsafed Mark only a nonchalant nod, airily flinging a little greeting with the nod, just a "How d'ye do, Mark? Did you have a good time in Boston?"

Patty and Waitstill, with some of the girls who had come long distances, ate their luncheon in a shady place under the trees behind the meeting house, for there was an afternoon service to come, a service with another long sermon. They separated after the modest meal to walk about the common or stray along the road to the academy, where there was a fine view.

Two or three times during the summer the sisters always went quietly and alone to the Baxter burying lot, where three grass grown graves lay beside one another, unmarked save by narrow wooden slabs, so short that the initials painted on them were almost hidden by the tufts of clover. The girls had brought roots of pansies and sweet alyssum and with a knife made holes in the earth and planted them here and there to make the spot a trifle less forbidding. They did not speak to each other during this sacred little ceremony. Their hearts were too full when they remembered afresh the absence of headstones, the lack of care, in the place where the three women lay who had ministered to their father, borne him children and patiently endured his arbitrary and loveless rule. Even Cleve Flanders' grave—the Edgewood shoemaker, who lay next—even his resting place was marked and, with a touch of some one's imagination, marked by the old man's own lapstone, twenty-five pounds in weight, a monument of his workaday life.

Waitstill rose from her feet, brushing the earth from her hands, and Patty did the same. The churchyard was quiet, and they were alone with the dead, mourned and unmourned, loved and unloved.

"I planted one or two pansies on the first one's grave," said Waitstill soberly. "I don't know why we've never done it before. There are no children to take notice of and remember her; it's the least we can do, and, after all, she belongs to the family."

"There is no family and there never was," suddenly cried Patty. "Oh, Waitv. Waitv. we are so alone, you realized, his smile more interesting than his manners more attractive, his eyes lashes longer; in a word, he had suddenly grown desirable. A month ago she could have observed with idle alien curiosity the spectacle of a thumb drawing nearer to another (see the thumb on the page of the "Val and Select Hymn Book." Now, at the morning service, she had wished nothing so much as to put Mark's thumb back into his pocket where it belonged and slap the girl's thumb smartly as it deserved.

The ignorant cause of Patty's distress was a certain Annabel Franklin, the daughter of a cousin of Mrs. Wilson's. Mark had stayed at the Franklin house during his three weeks' visit in Boston, where he had gone on business for his father. The young people had naturally seen much of each other and Mark's inflammable fancy had been so kindled by Annabel's doll-like charms that he had persuaded her to accompany him to his home and get taste of country life in Maine. Such a man, such is human nature and such is life, that Mark had no sooner got to the wholom object of his affections and his own roof than she began to pall.

Annabel was twenty-three, and, tell the truth, she had palled before more than once. She was so amiable so well finished—with her smooth flaxen hair, her neat nose, her buttonhole of a mouth and her trig shape—she appealed to the opposite sex generally and irresistibly as a worth helpmate. The only trouble was that she began to bore her suitors somewhat too early in the game, and they never got far enough to propose marriage. Flaws in her apparent perfection appeared from day to day and chilled the growth of the various young loves that had budded so auspiciously. She always agreed with everybody and everything in sight, even to the point of changing her mind on the instant circumstances seemed to make it advisable. Her instinctive point of view when she went so far as to hold on was somewhat cut and dried—in word, priggish. Her father had a ample fortune, and some one would inevitably turn up who would regard Annabel as an altogether worthy and desirable spouse. That was what she had seemed to Mark Wilson for a few weeks before he left the Franklin house in Boston, but there were moments now when he regretted, fugitively, that he had ever removed her from her proper sphere. She did not seem to fit into the conditions of life in Edgewood, and it may even be that her most glaring fault had been to describe Patty Baxter's hair at this very Sunday dinner as "caroty," her dress altogether "dreadful" and her style of beauty "unladylike." Ellen Wilson's feelings were somewhat injured by these criticisms of her intimate friend, and, in discussing the matter privately with her brother, he was inclined to agree with her.

And thus, so little do we know of the frankness of the blind god, thus was Annabel Franklin working for her rival's best interests, and, instead of reviling her in secret and treating her with disdain in public, Patty should have welcomed her cordially to all the delights of Riverboro society.

CHAPTER XI.

Haying Time.

EVERYBODY in Riverboro, Edgewood, Milliken's Mills, Spruce Swamp, Duck Pond and Moccasin was "haying" this

"I can say, if the Lord is right in our midst, as the Bible says, he can't think much of our singers this summer!"

"They're improv'in', now that Pliny Waterhouse plays his fiddle," Mrs. Day remarked pacifically. "There was times in the anthem when they kept together considerable well last Sunday. They didn't always chord, but there, they chordeed some! We're most there now, Abby, don't forget! Cephas won't ring the last bell till he knows his own folks is crossin' the common!"

Those were days of conscientious churchgoing, and every pew in the house was crowded. The pulpit was built on pillars that raised it six feet higher than the floor. The top was cushioned and covered with red velvet, surmounted by a huge gilt edged Bible. There was a window in the tower through which Cephas Cole could look into the church and while tolling the bell could keep watch for the minister. Always exactly on time, he would come in, walk slowly up the right hand aisle, mount the pulpit stairs, enter and close the door after him. Then Cephas would give one tremendous pull to warn loiterers on the steps, a pull that meant, "Parson's in the pulpit!" and was acted upon accordingly. Opening the big Bible, the minister raised his right hand impressively, and, saying, "Let us pray," the whole congregation rose in their pews with a great rustling and bowed their heads devoutly for the invocation.

Next came the hymn, generally at that day one of Isaac Watts'. The singers, fifteen or twenty in number, sat in a raised gallery opposite the pulpit, and there was a rod in front hung with red curtains to hide them when sitting down. Any one was free to join, which perhaps accounted for Aunt Abby's strictures as to time and tune: Jed Morrill, "blasphemous" as he was considered by that acrimonious lady, was the leader, and a good one too. There would be a great whispering and buzzing when Deacon Sumner, with his big fiddle, and Pliny Waterhouse, with his smaller one, would try to get in accord with Humphrey Baker and his clarinet. All went well when Humphrey was there to give the sure keynote, but in his absence Jed Morrill would use his tuning fork. When the key was finally secured by all concerned Jed would raise his stick, beat one measure to set the time, and all joined in or fell in, according to their several abilities. It was not always a perfect "bing in the way of a start, but they were well together at the end of the first line, and when, as now, the choir numbered a goodly number of voices and there were 300 or 400 in the pews nothing more inspiring in its peculiar way was ever heard than the congregational singing of such splendid hymns as "Old Hundred," "Duke Street" or "Coronation."

Waitstill led the troubles, and Ivory was at the far end of the choir in the basses, but each was conscious of the other's presence. This morning he could hear her noble voice rising a little above, or, perhaps, from its quality, separating itself somehow, ever so little, from the others. How full of strength and hope it was, her voice! How steadfast to the pitch! How golden its color! How moving in its crescendos! How the words flowed from her lips, not as if they had been written years ago, but as if they were the expression of her own faith! There were many in the congregation who were stirred, they knew not why, when there chanced to be only a few "carrying the air" and they could really hear Waitstill Baxter singing some dear old nothing more heinous than a casual exhibition of good needlework. Deacon Baxter furnished only the unbleached muslin for his daughters' undergarments, but twelve little tucks laboriously done by hand, elaborate inch wide edging, crocheted from white spool cotton and days of bleaching on the grass in the sun will make a petticoat that can be shown in church with some justifiable pride.

The Wilsons came up the aisle a moment later than was their usual habit, just after the parson had ascended the pulpit. Mrs. Wilson always entered the pew first and sat in the far end. Patty had looked at her admiringly and with a certain feeling of proprietorship for several Sundays. There was obviously no such desirable mother-in-law in the meeting house. Her changeable silk dress was the latest mode, her shawl of black llama lace expressed wealth in every delicate mesh, and her bonnet had a distinction that could only have emanated from Portland or Boston. Ellen Wilson usually came next, with as much of a smile to Patty in passing as she dared venture in the deacon's presence, and after her sidled in her younger sister, Selina, commonly called "Silly," and with considerable reason.

Mark had come home! Patty dared not look up, but she felt his approach behind the others, although her eyes sought the floor and her cheeks hung out signals of abashed but certain welcome. She heard the family settle in their seats somewhat hastily, the click of the pew door and the sound of Lawyer Wilson's cane as he stood it in the corner; then the parson rose to pray, and Patty closed her eyes with the rest of the congregation.

Opening them when Elder Boone rose to announce the hymn, they fell-amazed, resentful, uncomprehending-on the spectacle of Mark Wilson finding the place in the book for a strange young woman who sat beside him. Mark himself had on a new suit and wore a seal ring that Patty had never observed before, while the dress, pelisse and hat of the unknown were of a nature that no girl in Patty's position, and particularly of Patty's disposition, could have regarded without a desire to tear them from her person and stamp them underfoot or, better still, flaunt them herself and show the world how they should be worn!

Mark found the place in the hymn book for the creature, shared it with her, and once, when the Grant twins wriggled and Patty secured a better view, once, Mark shifted his hand on the page so that his thumb touched that of his pretty neighbor, who did not remove hers as if she found the proximity either unpleasant or improper. Patty compared her own miserable attire with that of the hated rival in front, and also contrasted Lawyer Wilson's appearance with that of her father; the former, well dressed in the style of a gentleman of the time, in broadcloth, with fine linen, and a tall silk hat carefully placed on the floor of the pew, while Deacon Baxter wore homespun made of wool from his own sheep, spun and woven, dyed and finished, at the fulling mill in the village, and carried a battered felt hat that had been a matter of ridicule these dozen years. The deacon would be buried in two coats. Jed Morrill always said, for he owned just that number and would be too mean to leave either of 'em behind him.

The sermon was fifty minutes long, time enough for a deal of thinking. Many a housewife, not wholly orthodox, cut and made over all her children's clothes, in imagination; planned the putting up of her fruit, the making the earth from her hands, and Patty did the same. The churchyard was quiet, and they were alone with the dead, mourned and unmourned, loved and unloved.

"I planted one or two pansies on the first one's grave," said Waitstill soberly. "I don't know why we've never done it before. There are no children to take notice of and remember her; it's the least we can do, and, after all, she belongs to the family."

"There is no family and there never was," suddenly cried Patty. "Oh, Waity, Waity, we are so alone, you and I! We've only each other in all the world, and I'm not the least bit of help to you as you are to me! I'm a silly, vain, conceited, ill behaved thing,

"Oh, Waity, Waity, we are so alone."

but I will be better, I will! You won't ever give me up, will you, Waity, even if I'm not like you? I haven't been good lately!"

"Hush, Patty, hush!" And Waitstill came nearer to her sister with a motherly touch of her hand. "I'll not have you say such things; you are the help-fullest and the loveliest girl that ever was, and the cleverest, too, and the liveliest and the best company keeper."

"No one thinks so but you," Patty responded dolefully, although she wiped her eyes as if a bit consoled.

It is safe to say that Patty would never have given Mark Wilson a second thought had he not taken her to drive on that afternoon in early May. The drive, too, would have quickly fled from her somewhat fickle memory had it not been for the kiss. The kiss was indeed a decisive factor in the situation and had shed a rosy, if somewhat fictitious light of romance over the past three weeks. Perhaps even the kiss, had it never been repeated, might have lapsed into its true perspective in due course of time had it not been for the sudden appearance of the stranger in the Wilson pew. The moment that Patty's gaze fell upon that fashionably dressed, instantaneously disliked girl, Marquis Wilson's stock rose twenty points in the market. She ceased in a jiffy to weigh and consider and criticise the young man, but regarded him with wholly new eyes. His figure was better than she had prankness of the blind god, thus was Annabel Franklin working for her rival's best interests, and, instead of reviling her in secret and treating her with disdain in public, Patty should have welcomed her cordially to all the delights of Riverboro society.

CHAPTER XI.

Haying Time.

EVERYBODY in Riverboro, Edge wood, Milliken's Mills, Spruce Swamp, Duck Pond and Moderation was "haying." There was a perfect frenzy of haying, for it was the Monday after the Fourth, the precise date in July when the Maine farmer said goodbye to repose and "bayed" desperately and unceasingly until every spear of green in his section was mowed down and safely under cover.

If a man had grass of his own he cut it, and if he had none he assisted in cutting that of some other man, for "to hay," although an unconventional verb, was, and still is, a very active one and in common circulation, although not used by the grammarians.

Whatever your trade and whatever your profession, it counted as naught in good weather. The fish man stopped selling fish, the meat man ceased to bring meat, the cobbler as well as the judge forsook the bench, and even the doctor made fewer visits than usual. The wage for work in the hay fields was a high one, and every man boy and horse in a village was pressed into service.

When Ivory Boynton had finished with his own small crop he commonly went at once to Lawyer Wilson, who had the largest acreage of hay land in the township. Ivory was always in great demand, for he was a mighty worker in the field and a very giant a "pitching," being able to pick up a fair sized haycock at one stroke of the fork and fling it on to the cart as if it were a feather.

Lawyer Wilson always took a hand himself if signs of rain appeared, and Mark occasionally visited the scene of action when a crowd in the field made a general jollification or when there was an impending thunderstorm.

In such cases even women and girl joined the workers and all hands ben together to the task of getting a load into the barn and covering the rest.

Deacon Baxter was wont to call Mark Wilson a "worthless, whey faced, lily handed whelp," but the description, though picturesque, was decidedly exaggerated. Mark disliked manual labor; but, having imbibed enough knowledge of law in his father's office to be an excellent clerk, he much preferred traveling about, settling the details of small cases, collecting rent and bad bills, to any form of work on a farm. This sort of life, on stage coaches and railway trains or on long driving trips with his own fast "troter," suited his adventurous disposition and gave him a sense of importance that was very necessary to his peace of mind. He was not especially intimate with Ivory Boynton, who studied law with his father during vacations and in every available hour of leisure during term time, as did many another young New England schoolmaster.

Mark's father's praise of Ivory's legal ability was a little too warm to please his son, as was the commendation of one of the county court judge on Ivory's preparation of a brief in certain case in the Wilson office. Ivory had drawn it up at Mr. Wilson's request merely to show how far he ur alized, his smile more interesting, his manners more attractive, his eyes longer; in a word, he had suddenly grown desirable. A month ago he could have observed with idle and ten curiosity the spectacle of his thumb drawing nearer to another (female) thumb on the page of the "Watts and Select Hymn Book." Now, at the morning service, she had wished nothing so much as to put Mark's thumb into his pocket where it belonged and slap the girl's thumb smartly and unduly as it deserved.

The ignorant cause of Patty's distress was a certain Annabel Franklin, the daughter of a cousin of Mrs. Wilson's. Mark had stayed at the Franklin house during his three weeks' visit to Boston, where he had gone on business for his father. The young people had naturally seen much of each other and Mark's inflammable fancy had been so kindled by Annabel's doll-like arms that he had persuaded her to accompany him to his home and get a taste of country life in Maine. Such a man, such is human nature and such life, that Mark had no sooner got the allom object of his affections under his own roof than she began to pall.

Annabel was twenty-three, and, to tell the truth, she had palled before more than once. She was so amiable, well finished—with her smooth flaxen hair, her neat nose, her buttonhole mouth and her trig shape—that she appealed to the opposite sex quite generally and irresistibly as a worthy helpmate. The only trouble was that she began to bore her suitors somewhat early in the game, and they never got far enough to propose marriage. Laws in her apparent perfection appeared from day to day and chilled the growth of the various young loves that had budded so auspiciously. She was always agreed with everybody and everything in sight, even to the point of angling her mind on the instant if circumstances seemed to make it advisable. Her instinctive point of view, when she went so far as to hold one, was somewhat cut and dried—in a word, priggish. Her father had an ample fortune, and some one would inevitably turn up who would regard Annabel as an altogether worthy and desirable spouse. That was what she seemed to Mark Wilson for a full week before he left the Franklin house in Boston, but there were months now when he regretted, fugitively, that he had ever removed her from her proper sphere. She did not seem to fit into the conditions of life at Edgewood, and it may even be that the most glaring fault had been to decide Patty Baxter's hair at this very day dinner as "carrotty," her dress together "dreadful" and her style of duty "unladylike." Ellen Wilson's feelings were somewhat injured by her criticisms of her intimate friend, and, in discussing the matter privately with her brother, he was inclined to see with her.

And thus, so little do we know of the selfishness of the blind god, thus is Annabel Franklin working for her all the best interests, and, instead of filling her in secret and treating her with disdain in public, Patty should be welcomed her cordially to all the lights of Riverboro society.

derstood the books and cases he was studying, and he had no idea that it differed in any way from the work of any other student. All the same, Mark's own efforts in a like direction had never received any special mention.

When he was in the hayfield he also kept as far as possible from Ivory, because there, too, he felt a superiority that made him for the moment a trifle disconcerted. It was no particular pleasure for him to see Ivory plunge his fork deep into the heart of a haystack, take a firm grasp of the handle, thrust forward his foot to steady himself and then raise the great fragrant heap slowly and swing it up to the waiting hay cart amid the applause of the crowd.

Rodman would be there, too, helping the man on top of the load and getting nearly buried each time as the mass descended upon him, but doing his slender best to distribute and tread it down properly, while his young heart glowed with pride at Cousin Ivory's prowess.

Independence day had passed, with its usual gayeties for the young people, in none of which the Baxter family had joined, and now, at 11 o'clock on this burning July morning, Waitstill was driving the old mare past the Wilson farm on her way to the river field.

Her father was working there, together with the two hired men whom he took on for a fortnight during the height of the season. If mowing, raking, pitching and carting of the precious crop could only have been done at odd times during the year or at night he would not have embittered the month of July by paying out money for labor. But nature was inexorable in the ripening of hay, and Old Foxy was obliged to succumb to the inevitable.

Waitstill had a basket packed with luncheon for three and a great demijohn of cool ginger tea under the wagon seat. Other farmers sometimes served hard cider or rum, but her father's principles were dead against this riotous extravagance. Temperance, in any and all directions, was cheap, and the deacon was a very temperate man, save in language.

The fields on both sides of the road were full of haymakers, and everywhere there was bustle and stir. There would be three or four men—one leading, the others following—slowly swinging their way through a noble piece of grass, and the smell of the mown fields in the sunshine was sweeter than honey in the comb.

There were patches of black-eyed Susans in the meadows here and there, while pink and white hardback grew by the road, with day lilies and blossoming milkweed. The bobolinks were fluting from every tree. There were thrushes in the alder bushes and orioles in the tops of the elms, and Waitstill's heart overflowed with joy at being in such a world of midsummer beauty, though life during the great heat and incessant work of haying time was a little more rigorous than usual.

The extra food needed for the hired men always kept her father in a state of mind closely resembling insanity. Coming downstairs to cook breakfast, she would find the coffee or tea measured out for the pot. The increased consumption of milk angered him beyond words, because it lessened the supply of butter for sale.

Everything that could be made with buttermilk was ordered so to be done,

"I will not bear it."

be greater, she thought, if only she could be certain that this theory was true, though her slavery would be just as galling.

It would be so easy for her to go away and earn a living. She who had never had a day of illness in her life; she who could sew, knit, spin, weave and cook. She could make enough money in Biddeford or Portsmouth to support herself and Patty, too, until the proper work was found for both.

But there would be a truly terrible conflict of wills, and such fierce arraignment of her unfilial conduct, such bitter and caustic argument from her father, such disapproval from the parson and the neighbors, that her very soul shrank from the prospect. If she could go alone and have no responsibility over Patty's future, that would be a little more possible, but she must think wisely for two.

And how could she leave Ivory when there might perhaps come a crisis in his life where she could be useful to him? How could she cut herself off from those Sundays in the choir, those dear, fugitive glimpses of him in the road or at prayer meeting? They were only slips of happiness, where her thirsty heart yearned for long, deep drafts, but they were immeasurably better than nothing.

Freedom from her father's heavy yoke—freedom to work and read and sing and study and grow—oh, how she longed for this! But at what a cost would she gain it if she had to harbor the guilty conscience of an undutiful and rebellious daughter and at the same time cut herself off from the sight of the one being she loved best in all the world!

She felt drawn toward Ivory's mother today. Three weeks had passed since her talk with Ivory in the churchyard, but there had been no possibility of an hour's escape from home. She was at liberty this afternoon—relatively at liberty, for, although her work, as usual, was laid out for her, it could be made up somehow or other before nightfall. She could drive over to the Boyntons' place, hitch her horse in the woods near the house, make her visit, and be in plenty of time to go on

"Uncle Bart might somehow guess where I am going," she thought, "but even if he did he would never tell any one."

"Where's Waitstill bound this afternoon, I wonder?" drawled Cephas, rising to his feet and looking after the departing team. "That reminds me I'd better run up to Baxter's and see if anything's wanted before I open the store."

"If it makes any difference," said his father dryly as he filled his pipe, "Patty's over to Mis' Day's spendin' the afternoon. Don't s'pose you want to call on the pig, do you? He's the only one to home."

Cephas made no remark, but gave his trousers a hitch, picked up a chip, opened his jackknife and, sitting down on the greensward, began idly whittling the bit of wood into shape.

"I kind o' wish you'd let me make the new ell two story, father. 'Twouldn't be much work; take it in slack time after hayin'."

"Land o' liberty! What do you want to do that for, Cephas? You 'bout pestered the life out o' me gittin' me to build the ell in the first place when we didn't need it no more'n a toad does a pocketbook. Then nothin' would do but you must paint it, though I shan't be able to have the main house painted for another year, so the old wine an' the new bottle side by side looks like the old driver an' makes us a laughin' stock to the village, an' now you want to change the thing into a two story! "I want to settle down," insisted Cephas doggedly.

"Well, settle—I'm willin'! I told you that afore you painted the ell. Ain't two rooms, 14 by 14, enough for you to settle down in? If they ain't, I guess your mother'd give you one o' the chambers in the main part."

CHAPTER XI.

Haying Time.

EVERYBODY in Riverboro, Edge-wood, Milliken's Mills, Spruce Swamp, Duck Pond and Moderation was "haying." There is a perfect frenzy of haying, for it is the Monday after the Fourth, the ecise date in July when the Maine rmer said goodbye to repose and ayed" desperately and unceasingly til every spear of green in his sec-n was mowed down and safely ur-cover.

f a man had grass of his own ho t it, and if he had none he assisted cutting that of some other man, for bay," although an unconventional rb, was, and still is, a very active e and in common circulation, al-ough not used by the grammarians. Whatever your trade and whatever ur profession, it counted as naught good weather. The fish man stop-d selling fish, the meat man ceased bring meat, the cobbler as well as e judge forsook the bench, and even e doctor made fewer visits than al. The wage for work in the haylds was a high one, and every man, y and horse in a village was pressed o service.

When Ivory Boynton had finished t his own small crop he commonly nt at once to Lawyer Wilson, who d the largest acreage of hay land in e township. Ivory was always in et demand, for he was a mighty rker in the field and a very giant at lching," being able to pick up a r sized haycock at one stroke of e fork and fling it on to the cart as it were a feather.

awyer Wilson always took a hand uself if signs of rain appeared, and rk occasionally visited the scene of ion when a crowd in the field made general jollification or when there s an impending thunderstorm.

n such cases even women and girls ned the workers and all hands bent ether to the task of getting a load o the barn and covering the rest.

Deacon Baxter was wont to call rk Wilson a "worthless, whey faced, handed whelp," but the descrip-a, though picturesque, was decid-exaggerated. Mark disliked manual or; but, having imbibed enough wledge of law in his father's office be an excellent clerk, he much pre-red traveling about, settling the de-s of small cases, collecting rents l bad bills, to any form of work on 'arm. This sort of life, on stage-ches and railway trains or on long-ving trips with his own fast "trot-" suited his adventurous disposi- and gave him a sense of impor-e that was very necessary to his ce of mind. He was not especially mate with Ivory Boynton, who died law with his father during all ations and in every available hour leisure during term time, as did y another young New England oolmaster.

heat and incessant work of haying time was a little more rigorous than usual.

The extra food needed for the hired men always kept her father in a state of mind closely resembling insanity. Coming downstairs to cook breakfast, she would find the coffee or tea measured out for the pot. The increased consumption of milk augered him beyond words, because it lessened the supply of butter for sale.

Everything that could be made with buttermilk was ordered so to be done, and nothing but water could be used in mixing the raised bread. The corn-ake must never have an egg; the pie crust must be shortened only with lard or with a mixture of beef fat and dripping, and so on, and so on, eternally.

When the girls were respectively seventeen and thirteen, Waitstill had begged a small plot of ground for them to use as they liked, and beginning at that time, they had gradually made a little garden, with a couple of fruit trees and a thicket of red, white and black currants, raspberry and black-berry bushes.

For several summers now they had sold enough of their own fruit to buy a pair of shoes or gloves, a scarf or a hat, but even this tiny income was beginning to be menaced. The deacon positively suffered as he looked at that odd corner of earth, not any bigger than his barn floor, and saw what his girls had done with no tools but a spade and a hoe and no help but their own hands. He had no leisure (so he growled) to cultivate and fertilize ground for small fruits and no money to pay a man to do it, yet here was food grown under his very eye and it did not belong to him!

The girls worked in their garden chiefly at sunrise in spring and early summer or after supper in the evening. All the same, Waitstill had been told by her father the day before that she was not only using ground, but time that belonged to him, and that he should expect her to provide "pie filling" out of her garden patch during haying to help satisfy the ravenous appetites of that couple of "great, gorming, greedy lubbers" that he was hiring this year. He had stopped the peeling of potatoes before boiling because he disapproved of the thickness of the parings he found in the pig's pail, and he stood over Patty at her work in the kitchen until Waitstill was in daily fear of a tempest of some sort.

Coming in from the shed one morning she met her father just issuing from the kitchen where Patty was standing like a young Fury in front of the sink. "Father's been spying at the eggshells I settled the coffee with and said I'd no business to leave so much good in the shell when I broke an egg. I will not bear it. He makes me feel fairly murderous! You'd better not leave me alone with him when I'm like this. Oh, I know that I'm wicked, but isn't he wicked too, and who was wicked first?"

Patty's heart had been set on earning and saving enough pennies for a white muslin dress, and every day rendered the prospect more uncertain.

Waitstill's patience was flagging a trifle, too, under the stress of the hot days and the still hotter, breathless nights. The suspicion crossed her mind now and then that her father's miserliness and fits of temper might be caused by a mental malady over which he now had little or no control, having never mastered himself in all his life. Her power of endurance would sight of the one being she loved best in all the world!

She felt drawn toward Ivory's mother today. Three weeks had passed since her talk with Ivory in the churchyard, but there had been no possibility of an hour's escape from home. She was at liberty this afternoon—relatively at liberty, for, although her work, as usual, was laid out for her, it could be made up somehow or other before nightfall. She could drive over to the Boyntons' place, hitch her horse in the woods near the house, make her visit, yet be in plenty of time to go up to the river field and bring her father home to supper.

Patty was over at Mrs. Abel Day's learning a new crochet stitch and helping her to start a log cabin quilt. Ivory and Rodman she knew were both away in the Wilson hayfield. No time would ever be more favorable. So, instead of driving up Town House hill, when she returned to the village she kept on over the bridge.

CHAPTER XII.

Uncle Bart Discourses.

UNCLE BART and Cephas were taking their nooning hour under the Nodhead apple tree as Waitstill passed the joiner's shop and went over the bridge.

"I want to settle down," insisted Cephas doggedly.

"Well, settle—I'm willin'! I told you that afore you painted the ell. Ain't two rooms, 14 by 14, enough for you to settle down in? If they ain't, I guess your mother'd give you one o' the chambers in the main part."

"She would if I married Phoebe Day, but I don't want to marry Phoebe," argued Cephas. "And mother's gone and made a summer kitchen for herself out in the ell a'ready. I bet yet she'll never move out if I should want to move in on a sudden."

"I told you you was takin' that risk when you cut a door through from the main part," said his father gently. "If you hadn't done that your mother would 'a' had to gone round outside to git int' the ell, and mebbe she'd 'a' stayed to home when it stormed, anyhow. Now your wife'll have her troopin' in an' out, in an' out, the whole 'durin' time."

"I only cut the door through to please mother, so't she'd favor my gittin' married, but I guess't won't do no good. You see, father, what I was thinkin' of is, a girl would mebbe jump at a two story, four roomed ell when she wouldn't look at a smaller place."

Modernize your Kitchen

One by one the bugbears of housekeeping are being put to rout through the instrumentality of gas. The modern kitchen—which means the all-gas kitchen—is now a recognized part of the up-to-date home. The all-gas kitchen lightens labor. It means a clean, wholesome, sanitary kitchen, as there is no coal dust or ashes to be spread around, and it becomes a real pleasure to work in it. Every housewife desires to cook and heat water in the most economical way, in the quickest, most dependable way, with the least possible work.

The All-Gas way is the solution to the problem.

The hot weather is here now and if you want a cool, comfortable kitchen this summer come and select your Gas Range and Water Heater now. We have ranges at all prices.

GRIMM ALFALFA IN THE EAST.

It is the Best For the Clay Soils of Our Eastern States.

There are undoubtedly as wide differences in types of alfalfa as in types of corn and potatoes. These variations lie in the general hardness of the plant, the point from which the buds start from the crown and the system of the root growth. All these factors naturally affect the quantity and quality of the top, which makes the forage, says R. F. Stevens in the Country Gentleman.

One of the principal reasons for the many failures with alfalfa in the east is that the seed is not adapted to the climate or the soil. Alfalfa seed matures more readily in a drought; consequently it is largely produced in the irrigated regions of the west and southwest, where the water content of the soil is more nearly under control and where the deep, porous, loamy subsoil provides ideal conditions for a root system containing a single taproot. Much of our seed comes therefore from a latitude south of that where it is to be grown.

The main point of difference in the various types of alfalfa is in root structure. In all kinds there is a tendency

CONCERNING WHEAT.

Wheat is not a uniformly profitable crop. At least it does not compare favorably with the other leading crops—corn, hay, tobacco, cotton and alfalfa—if we accept the cost investigations of the United States department of agriculture at their face value. Winter wheat continues to hold its own on the general farms of the eastern, central and north-western states because of its peculiar fitness in the rotation and the fact that it can be grown without competing with other crops for the farmer's labor.

There is little question that at least half the total wheat crop of the country is produced with a very narrow margin of profit, and winter wheat may be regarded as a by product of the farm rotation which in itself is not profitable, at least on most central and eastern farms. No yield of less than twenty bushels an acre can be regarded as a profitable crop when it is considered apart from the value of the growing wheat as a means of securing a stand of grass or clover or of utilizing land during the winter.—Country Gentleman.

SELECTING SEED CORN.

Early Selection From the Hill Has Important Advantages.

Hill selection of seed is urged by every institution interested in the improvement of corn. By selecting corn from the standing stalks in the field one can consider other things besides the ear itself. The height of the ear on the stalk and the strength of the stalk may both be considered, and whether or not the ear grew on a stalk that had the whole hill to itself or had to compete with two or three other stalks can be determined, while if one waits until the corn has been cut these factors cannot be considered.

While the large, heavy ears are desirable, one cannot profitably select them at the expense of maturity, because corn that will not mature is bound to be an unprofitable crop. Early selection from the hill avoids the danger of the corn being injured by frost while it is still damp in the husk. It also allows for ample time for the corn to become thoroughly dried out before freezing weather, which is very important in maintaining a strong germination.—A. D. Wilson, Director of Agricultural Extension, University Farm, St. Paul.

Portable Stock Chute.

Every farmer has occasion to load some animals into a wagon, and many do this by building a stock chute. Usually these chutes are built as permanent fixtures in connection with feed racks, but are often made so they can be taken from one part of the farm to another. When a chute of this kind is built heavy and strong enough to support the weight of a mature hog or a large calf it becomes a clumsy thing to move. An Indiana farmer has solved this problem of inconvenience by placing his chute on a truck. The BARNYARD MANURE.

Value of an Important Manurial Resource Which Should Be Saved.

[Prepared by United States department of agriculture.]

Barnyard manure is the most important manurial resource of the farm and should be carefully saved and used. It not only enriches the soil with nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash, but it also renders the stored up materials of the soil more available, improves the mechanical condition of the soil, makes it warmer and enables it to retain more moisture.

On the basis of prices charged for commercial fertilizers, the average value of the manure annually produced by each horse or mule is $27, by each head of cattle $10, by each hog $12 and by each sheep $2. Probably less than half these values are actually realized in practice. It should be stated, however, that this method of estimating the value of manure is often misleading.

POULTRY MANURE IS THE MOST VALUABLE.

The real value is determined by the effect of manure on crop fields and on quality of crop products.

The urine is by far the most valuable part of the excreta of animals. It is especially rich in readily available nitrogen, which rapidly escapes into the air if special precautions are not taken to prevent its loss. It is also rich in potash, but deficient in phosphoric acid. It should, as a rule, be used in connection with the solid dung, the one thus supplying the deficiencies of the other and making a more evenly balanced manure.

Barnyard manure is a very variable substance, its composition and value depending mainly upon (1) age and kind of animal, (2) quantity and quality of food, (3) proportion of litter and (4) method of management. Ordinary barnyard manure, properly cared for, may be assumed to contain on the average one-half of 1 per cent of nitro-

HIS CURIOUS FALL.

It Wedged Him Head Down in a Ravine in a Steep Cliff.

A personal experience of a high sensational character is recorded by H. Savage Lander in his book "Across Unknown South America."

"The forest near the Secondary ravine was at first overgrown with dense vegetation that gave us a good deal of work and extra exertion, but at that, when we got some distance from the water, the forest was fairly clear except of course for the fallen trees. We found troublesome ravines of great depth where streamlets had cut their way through.

"In going down one of those difficult ravines I had an accident that might have been fatal. The ravine, the side of which were almost vertical, was very narrow—only about ten metres across. We let ourselves down, hanging on to a liana. When we reached the bottom we found a tiny brook winding its way between great round boulders that left a space about five feet wide for the water. I began to climb the other side, and I had got a height of about thirty feet. In order to go up this steep incline I had set my foot against a small tree and I pulled myself up by a liana. Unluckily the liana suddenly gave way. The weight of the load that I had on my shoulders made me lose my balance so that I tumbled described a complete semicircle. I dropped down head first from the height on the rocks below.

"Providence once more looked after me on that occasion. On the fall down I already imagined myself dead but no—my head entered the cleft between two great rocks, again which my shoulders and the load I carried came jammed, while my legs waved wildly in midair. I was forced hard against the two side rocks that I could not possibly extricate myself. It was only when Benedicto and the new man came to my help and pulled me out that we were able to resume our journey. I was much shaken and a good deal bruised, but otherwise none the worst for that unpleasant fall."

WEIRD DREAM STORY.

The Startling Vision That Saved the Life of Lady Vernon.

The following dream story is told in "The Story of My Life," by August J. C. Hare. The story was told to M. Hare in Rome in 1870:

"Lady Vernon dreamed that she saw the butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other, crossing the entrance hall, and she awoke with great start. After awhile she composed herself to sleep again, and she dreamed—she dreamed that she saw the butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other, on the middle of the staircase, and she awoke with a great shock. She got up. She thought she could not be quite well and she took a little sal volatile. At last she fell asleep again, and she dreamed—she dreamed that she saw the butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other, standing at her bedroom door, and she awoke in great terror, and she jumped out of bed, and she said, 'I'll have an end of this; I'll have an end of these foolish imaginations.'

"And she rushed to the door and threw it wide open. And there just outside stood the butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other."

ALFALFA ROOTS.

toward the single long taproot. In most cases there are very few lateral or spreading roots. In some others, however, the taproot is not so prominent, as it has many branching or spreading roots.

The type of alfalfa should be adapted to the soil from the standpoint of root structure. The deep, well drained loam or gravel makes an ideal soil for the long taproot variety, which will not grow in soils having a compact subsoil.

The agricultural department of the Lehigh Valley railroad hopes to see alfalfa growing on every farm in northern Pennsylvania and New York. Much of the land along this road is of limestone formation and is usually well drained. On this there was little trouble. The greatest difficulty came from the volusia silt soils of southern New York and northern Pennsylvania. Here, under approved methods, alfalfa could be well started, only to be heaved entirely out of the ground by the alternate freezing and thawing of the first spring.

In practically every large field that heaved, however, as well as in many fields in the limestone belt that had gradually run out, there always remained individual plants in spots about the field. Examination of these individual plants showed that they did not rest in any particularly favorable location, but that they had remained in the soil because the seed had been mixed.

It was found that the more branching the roots of the plants the larger were the branches above the crown. Alfalfa experts of the western states were called upon, and samples of many branching root varieties were secured. Among these the Grimm alfalfa gave the greatest promise of success on the hardpan soils. A further advantage was that it had been propagated sufficiently long to give an ample supply of seed. It is hoped that a desirable strain may also be developed from the Baltic variety.

Feeding Ducks and Geese.

Geese and ducks are very similar in their habits of eating. Some recommend feeding the grain whole, but we prefer feeding it ground, especially in winter, as this enables us to mix the green feed with it. Bran, shorts and cornmeal or barley meal, equal parts by weight, mixed with clover leaves or boiled vegetables, make one of the best rations for winter. Milk mixed with it improves it greatly. We have secured fairly good results from feeding boiled roots, shorts and milk, but the addition of a small amount of grain gives better results. For summer feeding the geese require nothing but good pasture, while the ducks do well if fed whole grain once a day in water if rapid growth is not desired.—C. E. Brown, Poultryman, Northwest Experiment Station, Crookton, Minn.

manent fixtures in connection with feed racks, but are often made so they can be taken from one part of the farm to another. When a chute of this kind is built heavy and strong enough to support the weight of a mature hog or a large calf it becomes a clumsy thing to move. An Indiana farmer has solved this problem of inconvenience by placing his chute on a truck. The wheels and axles used in making his chute were parts of old machinery found on the farm. The wheels were taken from an old mower. The short end of the chute is provided with two strong iron hooks which are sharpened so as to engage the bottom of the wagon bed and to prevent the chute slipping back when the animals start upward. With such an arrangement there is no difficulty in building a chute of ample strength because the question of weight is of small importance. The chute can be hooked on behind the wagon and hauled to any part of the farm.

SOME BEE WISDOM.

Beekeeping is fast becoming the business of the specialist, and the number of men who devote their entire attention to the business is rapidly increasing. However, there is no reason why the average farmer cannot keep a few colonies of bees to supply honey for home consumption, with perhaps some surplus for sale in good years.

In moving swarms of bees long distances as much care as possible should be taken to prevent sharp jars and bumping. This can perhaps be best prevented by crating with as much excelsior or other padding between the hives and outer casing as possible.

The United States department of agriculture attributes most of the reported decrease to the brood diseases of bees which are now found widely distributed in the United States. The department has knowledge of these diseases in about 20 per cent of all counties in the United States. Where disease exists beekeepers often lose colonies and attribute their loss to some other cause. Because of these facts the department advises persons interested in bees to inform themselves concerning these diseases. It is quite possible to keep bees with profit with disease prevalent in the neighborhood provided the beekeeper knows how to treat the disease.

potash, but deficient in phosphoric acid. It should, as a rule, be used in connection with the solid dung, the one thus supplying the deficiencies of the other and making a more evenly balanced manure.

Barnyard manure is a very variable substance, its composition and value depending mainly upon (1) age and kind of animal, (2) quantity and quality of food, (3) proportion of litter and (4) method of management. Ordinary barnyard manure, properly cared for, may be assumed to contain on the average one-half of 1 per cent of nitrogen and one-third of 1 per cent of phosphoric acid.

Mature animals, neither gaining nor losing weight, excrete practically as much fertilizing material as they consume in their food. Growing animals may excrete as little as 50 per cent as much as is contained in their food, milch cows from 65 to 85 per cent, fattening or working animals from 85 to 95 per cent. In the fertilizing value of equal weights of manure in its normal condition farm animals probably stand in the following order: Poultry, sheep, pigs, horses, cows.

The amounts of fertilizing constituents in the manure stand in direct relation to those in the food. As regards the value of manure produced, the concentrated feeding stuffs, such as meat scrap, cottonseed meal, linseed meal and wheat bran, stand first, the leguminous plants (clover, peas, etc.) second, the grasses third, cereals (oats, corn, etc.) fourth, and root crops, such as turnips, beets and mangel wurzels, last.

The nitrogen of the food exerts a greater influence on the quality of the manure than any other constituent. It is the most costly fertilizing constituent. It undergoes more modification in the animal stomach than the mineral constituents (potash and phosphoric acid) and rapidly escapes from the manure in fermentation. The secretion of urine increases with the increase of nitrogenous substances in the food, thus necessitating the use of larger amounts of litter and affecting both the amount and value of the manure.

Barnyard manure rapidly undergoes change. When practicable to remove the manure rapidly and spread it on the field at short intervals the losses of valuable constituents need not be very great, but when the manure must be stored for some time the difficulties of preservation are greatly increased.

One of the best ways to utilize barnyard manure is to apply it in connection with such fertilizing materials as supplement its fertilizing constituents. These materials may be either composted with the manure or used separately, except in case of nitrate, such as nitrate of soda, which should never be composted with barnyard manure on account of danger of denitrification and loss of nitrogen. As is well known, barnyard manure is lasting in its effects and in many cases need not be applied so frequently as the more soluble and quick acting superphosphates and potash and nitrogen salts.

He rode away without having murdered her at all, and he was never heard of again."

Clews to His Writing.

Sometimes the worst of handwriting becomes intelligible when one grasps the rules, for a man's script—particularly an author's—is frequently a difficult, chiefly by his deliberate unconscious inversion of the accepted rules of calligraphy. Henry W. Beecher had a daughter who acted as copyist, and she read him with simply by remembering three principles—that in her father's manuscript no dotted letter was meant for an uncrossed letter stood for "u" that no capital letter ever began a sentence.

The Provencal Tongue.

Mistral, the great Provencal poet has been likened to Robert Burns the work he did. But Burns' task was a child's play compared with Mistral. The Scottish poet found his language fully grown and completely alive; but Mistral had to create his means of expression. Provencal had lost every resemblance to a literary tongue, the new poet-patriot had to mold afresh, to recreate and to build up the ruins left by the vineyard and farm. "Our Provencal," said Mistral, "was a country lass, ragged and wild. She is now a wonderfully beautiful creature, but it is doubtful whether the genius of Mistral can keep her alive. The educational reformer France does not like such irregular beauty."—Chicago News.

Newspaper Reporters.

I have always had great sympathy for newspaper reporters—a class of men generally about equally feared and criticized. During a large part of my life since my graduation I have been brought in constant contact with the men of this profession. Only on rare occasions have I suffered at their hands serious injustice, due either to deliberate intent or to gross misunderstanding. I have generally found them courteous and considerate, honestly desirous of getting the truth and of reporting it accurately.—Abbott's "Reincarnations" in Outlook.

Regret.

Regret is a dangerous thing. I let a little one no bigger than a mustard seed into your heart, and before you know it you've hatched out a whole brood. Everything is woven into a pattern of the whole, and the Lord knew the figure he had in mind.—Ellen Glasgow.

HIS CURIOUS FALL.

Wedge Him Head Down in a Silt in a Steep Cliff.

A personal experience of a highly unusual character is recorded by A. Savage Lander in his book "Across Unknown South America."

"The forest near the Secondary river as at first overgrown with dense vegetation that gave us a good deal of work and extra exertion, but after that, when we got some distance from the water, the forest was fairly clean, except of course for the fallen trees. I found troublesome ravines of great depth where streamlets had cut their way through.

"In going down one of those difficult vines I had an accident that might have been fatal. The ravine, the sides of which were almost vertical, was very narrow—only about ten metres across. We let ourselves down, holding on to a liana. When we reached the bottom we found a tiny brook leading its way between great round boulders that left a space about two feet wide for the water. I began to climb the other side, and I had got to height of about thirty feet. In order to go up this steep incline I had set one foot against a small tree and I pulled myself up by a liana. Unluckily the liana suddenly gave way. The weight of the load that I had on my shoulders made me lose my balance so that my body described a complete semicircle, dropped down head first from that height on the rocks below.

"Providence once more looked after me on that occasion. On the flight down I already imagined myself dead; it no—my head entered the cavity between two great rocks, against which my shoulders and the load became jammed, while my legs waved wildly in midair. I was forced so hard against the two side rocks that could not possibly extricate myself. It was only when Benedicto and the new man came to my help and pulled me out that we were able to resume our journey. I was much shaken and a good deal bruised, but otherwise none the worse for that unpleasant fall."

WEIRD DREAM STORY.

The Startling Vision That Saved the Life of Lady Vernon.

The following dream story is told in "The Story of My Life," by Augustus C. Hare. The story was told to Mr. Hare in Rome in 1870:

"Lady Vernon dreamed that she saw a butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other, crossing the entrance hall, and she awoke with a great start. After awhile she composed herself to sleep again, and she dreamed—she dreamed that she saw a butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other, on the middle of the staircase, and she awoke with a great shock. She got up. She thought she could not be quite well, and she took a little sal volatile. At last she fell asleep again, and she dreamed—she dreamed that she saw a butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other, standing at her bedroom door, and she awoke in a great terror, and she jumped out of bed, and she said, 'I'll have an end of this; I'll have an end of these foolish imaginations.'

"And she rushed to the door and drew it wide open. And there just outside stood the butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other.

SERVE CHOCOLATE FOR YOUNG FOLKS

It Is a Food Beverage of Very Great Value.

MORE WHOLESOME THAN TEA.

Tempting Ways of Preparing This Delicious Drink For the Delectation of Guests and Attractive Set In Which It May Be Offered Them.

Visitors are apt to drop in at any time for a chat, and happy the hostess who is prepared to offer her guests a cooling, refreshing drink, for it will add much to their pleasure and comfort.

A chocolate sirup is indeed a good friend in need. This one can keep on hand, and the best of it is it can be served ice cold or boiling hot, as the guest prefers. Some women prefer a hot drink to a cold one, even though the day be very warm.

To make the sirup put two ounces of chocolate into a double boiler and let it melt slowly. Then turn in two cupsful of boiling water in which two pounds of sugar have been dissolved. Stir thoroughly, and when all the ingredients are smooth and well blended strain and flavor with vanilla to taste. Bottle and put away in a cool place. When wanted put one tablespoonful of the sirup into a tumbler, add a little cracked ice and fill up with cold water. The same quantity will make a delicious cup of chocolate with the addition of boiling water, topping off with whipped cream.

To make chocolate in Vienna style shave two squares of chocolate fine and add one pint of hot water. When dissolved add one scant teaspoonful of brown sugar and one pint of milk. Stir constantly. Have ready dissolved two teaspoonfuls of cornstarch in half a cupful of cold milk, and as soon as the chocolate boils stir it in. Before putting the cornstarch into the boiling mixture add two or three tablespoonfuls of the hot mixture to it and so avoid any chance of its being lumpy.

PRINCE WILLIAM OF GERMANY.

Grandson of Kaiser Was Born on the Anniversary of American Independence—Items of Interest For Little People—Puzzles and a Game.

In view of the great war now in progress in Europe it is rather interesting to note that the kaiser's grandson, also named William and in line for the imperial crown, was born on the 4th of July, 1906, which makes him just eight years of age. Of course the little prince does not know much about the great war now being fought. It is not well for little folks to hear of such dreadful happenings. Prince William is the oldest son of the crown prince and may eventually be a king and emperor. The fact that he was born on the anniversary of America's Declaration of Independence renders him of peculiar interest to all the little people who dwell in this "land of the free," where kings and emperors are unknown.

AFRAID SHE WAS DYING

Suffered Terribly Until She Took "Fruit-a-lives"

ST. JEAN DE MATHA, JAN. 27th. 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been cured by 'Fruit-a-lives'. I suffered so much that I would not dare eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of 'Fruit-a-lives'. I did not wish to try them for I had little confidence in them but, seeing my husband's anxiety, I decided to do so and at once I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was cured. While sick, I lost several pounds, but after taking 'Fruit-a-lives', I quickly regained what I had lost. Now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am completely cured, thanks to 'Fruit-a-lives'."

THE IDEAL HOSTESS.

It is not an easy office to fill. Here are some requirements:
 She must never look bored.
 She must not show that she is tired.
 She must not talk too long to one guest.
 She must make all feel at home.
 She must get congenial people together.
 She must know how to keep conversation rolling.
 She must see everything without being fussy or distracted.
 She must look as if she was enjoying herself and yet not be selfish over her own pleasure.
 She must know when to ask people to show their different talents and yet not allow any one of them to weary the company.

A hostess who can fulfill the above will be successful. Her invitations will be those most eagerly sought for and her parties those best attended.

tion of boiling water, topping off with whipped cream.

Have ready dissolved two teaspoonfuls of cornstarch in half a cupful of cold milk, and as soon as the chocolate boils stir it in. Before putting the cornstarch into the boiling mixture add two or three tablespoonfuls of the hot mixture to it and so avoid any chance of its being lumpy.

Let the whole boil up once, and the cooking is done. Take one egg, break it into a quart bowl and pour on it half a cupful of hot—not boiling—water and beat thoroughly with an egg beater. A great deal of foam will be produced by this combination. Just as the chocolate is to be served put this foam in the chocolate pot (which has been heated) before pouring in the chocolate, reserving part of the foam for the top. A bit of vanilla or cinnamon may be added instead of the egg. If some strong, concentrated coffee is used the chocolate resembles Russian chocolate, which some people like, but which to others is a sort of nauseating compound.

Most people understand that chocolate is a food beverage of value, but do not know exactly why. A good reason is that chocolate or cocoa, when diluted with water to make a drink, becomes merely a mixture, not at all an infusion, as is the case with tea or coffee. Therefore the whole substance of the cocoa or the chocolate is swallowed with the diluting water it is mixed with. Tea leaves and coffee grounds are thrown away. Only the water of their infusion is used; therefore only a portion of their particular substance enters the body after a cup of either is taken.

The substance of the chocolate used in the stimulating, fatigue removing cup of hot drink is of infinitely higher food value than is the substance of either the tea leaves or the coffee grounds. No less than 86 per cent of it is nourishment; only 6 per cent is water; less than 1 per cent is useless fiber. Fat, in the form of cocoa butter, purest oil and more nourishing even than marrow of meat, is present in no less a proportion than 50 per cent; this if the cocoa be pure and undiluted with arrowroot or other starchy powders.

The dainty chocolate set illustrated here is blue and gold on a cream background. The graceful pot is matched by the straight little cups and curved saucers.

A Strong Glue.

Soak one ounce of fine glue in water for twelve hours, then add a pinch of sugar, one-half an ounce of gum arabic and three ounces of water in a basin. Place this basin in a pan of hot water to half its depth and let the water boil until the contents are dissolved and the mass is thin. Leave until cold before using.

Repentance.

If our past actions reproach us they cannot be atoned for by our own severe reflections so effectually as by a contrary behavior.—Steele.

An Amusing Game.

This game is played by all sitting in a circle while one of the number tells a story. After a few words or a sentence he makes a pause, when his neighbor on the right must repeat the sentence to his right hand neighbor, who passes it to the next until it has gone quickly around the circle to the relator, who proceeds with the next words of his story, and so on, each sentence as he speaks it being caught up and repeated from one to another till it comes back to him. The story always ends with the words "the last one up must pay," when every one must spring from his seat. Any one who fails to rise at the proper moment must pay a forfeit. The game will be more easily understood from the following example:

The story teller says to his right hand neighbor, "Here is an engraving"—at this pause, and those following, the neighbor must repeat the words to her neighbor and she to the next until it comes around to the relator, who resumes, "which represents a young lady—arrested by three robbers—the first detains her—the second wishes to stab her—but the third, seeing the police coming, cries, 'The last one up must pay!'"

At this cry all the company rise, except those who forget or do not know the game, and these must pay a forfeit, as also must those who fail to repeat the interrupted sentences correctly.

Hark! A sound like call to battle,
Now a rumble, now a drumming,
Now a steady roar and rattle!
See the raindrop soldiers coming.

Every one advances proudly,
Straight of figure, full of dash,
Shoots his little rifle loudly—
Falls, a martyr, with a splash.

Fighting's on in every puddle,
Armies marching on apace,
Here a thousand dying huddle;
Here a thousand take their place.

Mr. Sun, from heaven peeping,
Wonders what it's all about,
O'er the field a sunbeam sweeping—
Puts the soldiers all to rout.
